PETROLEUM EMULSION.

How and Something Fall Treatment For San Jose Scale.

Those who have to combat the San Jose scale will be interested in knowing that the Connecticut experiment station at Storrs has worked out a new formula which is very promising. It can be applied in the fall, when the scale is most susceptible to injury, and is easily applied and prepared. It has no ill effect on the limb nor does it corrode spraying machinery.

This new remedy goes by the name of petroleum emulsion. It is made as follows: Use two quarts of carbolic acid, two and a half quarts of fish oil and one pound of caustic potash. This is brought to a temperature of 200 degrees. The next step is to add three and a half quarts of kerosene and five and a half quarts of water. This mixture is a "stock solution, or, as Professor Jarvis explained, "an emulsifier." Then for the next step eight parts of this emulsifier is taken, one part of water, eighteen parts of crude petroleum and four parts of rosin oil.

Dilute the Mixture.

To spray, dilute this mixture with fifteen parts of water. The formula sounds a little complicated, but is not in actual practice. Stock solutions are made, and it is little bother to have the mixture ready for application. It stays in suspension for days at a time, and while an agitator in spray barrel is not necessary it is a little better to use such. Arsenate of lead cannot be mixed with it, but paris green can with fairly good results. There is no special danger in making the mixture, says New England Homestead. Horticulturists everywhere, west as well as east, will watch the behavior of this mixture closely.

NOSE BAG.

Easy Way to Feed the Farmer's Horse Away From Home.

A common way of feeding dray horses and other street teams in the city is illustrated here. A sack is made out of good strong ducking of a circumference that will allow of its being pulled over the horse's nose and leaving sufficient room for him to work his jaws easily. This sack is anywhere from a foot to fourteen inches in length. The bottom is made of a good stiff piece of harness leather cut out and sewed firmly into the hem of the ducking. A leather strap is fased into one side of the mouth of the sack, and a buckle is riveted on the other, so that the whole may be strapped on to the horse's head, as shown. In order to feed a horse must be unchecked, and he soon learns to place the sack on the ground, where he can push his nose to the bottom of it to clean out the last of the food.

For the farmer who takes a day to go to town these sacks will be found very handy, as a horse can be fed with them without any waste of grain providing he is unchecked. A little caution should be used in placing the sack on a horse not accustomed to it, as it may cause him to jerk back. However, after he has once eaten a meal from it he can be considered well broken in.—Iowa Homestead.

Ripening Green Tomatoes.

Often when frost comes there are many tomatoes on the vines that are nearly full grown, but that have not yet ripened enough to send to market. I have picked such tomatoes and put them in a cool, dark place to ripen slowly and sent them to market when the supply had run low and prices run high, says a writer in New England Homestead. But for home use a better way is to pick the smaller ones from the vines and then hang up the branch in the cellar, darkening the windows and keeping the place cool. They will ripen slowly, and one may indulge in ripe tomatoes in January, when those grown in a hothouse and not as large or any better flavor are selling at 25 cents a pound or more. Try it.

Saving the Clover.

It is a failing of the American farmer when a blade of grass or a stem of clover makes a strong showing to try to turn it into beef, mutton or pork. In this effort to utilize it he entirely forgets that the plant may need a little winter protection. He does not understand how little is often sufficient to save the plant from frost destruction. When the clover is not pastured it is often allowed to perfect its seed, which is as fatal to the crop next year as the winter freezing. Clipping would save the crop, when it is so forward as to bloom and perfect seed.—Rural New Yorker.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson V.—Fourth Quarter, For Nov. 3, 1907.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Josh. xx. 1-9. Memory Verses, 2, 3—Golden Text, Ps. lxii. 7—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

(Copyright, 1907, by American Press Association.)

It might be safely said that every person, place or thing in Scripture, either by analogy or contrast, points to Him who when walking with the two to Emmaus expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself and who said that same evening to the disciples in Jerusalem, "All things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning Me" (Luke xxiv. 27, 44). Some people are typical of Him in a very special way, such as Abel, Isaac, Joseph, Moses, David, Melchizedek and others. He is very clearly seen in such things as the tree of life, the manna, the rock that was smitten and the water flowing therefrom, the tabernacle and all its parts and vessels, the vine, the brazen serpent; in such creatures as the sacrifices in Eden, the Passover lamb, the red heifer, the goats and other sacrifices of the day of atonement, the birds of the leper cleansing, and as to places, in none more notably than the cities of refuge of today's lesson. How many precious texts the word "refuge" brings to mind! "God is our refuge; . . . the God of Jacob is our refuge. "My refuge is in God," "Thou art my strong refuge." "I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge" (Ps. xlvi. 1, 7, 11; lxii. 7; lxxi. 7; xci. 2). The cities of refuge were for those who killed others accidentally, that no innocent blood might be shed. There was no refuge for the guilty. Here our lesson comes by contrast, at least part of it. We must plead guilty before we can expect that Christ will receive us. He came to save sinners—the lost ones (Rom. iii. 19, 24; Luke xix. 10; I Tim. i. 15)—and of all precious words for such what can excel "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out?" (John vi. 37.) The full story of the cities of refuge is found in Num. xxxv. and Deut. xix. In connection with today's lesson chapter and the first mention of them is in Ex. xxi. 13. But we first hear of a refuge for the sinner in Gen. iii. 15, 21, and then all the way through to Rev. xxii. 17. The cities were conveniently situated for all, three on each side of the Jordan. Jesus is a Saviour nigh to all who call upon Him in truth.

There was a way prepared to each city (Deut. xix. 3), and where other ways crossed there would doubtless be directions concerning the right way.

As soon as the fleeing one entered the city he was perfectly safe (verses 4, 5). The sinner who flees to Christ, or, in other words, receives Him or believes in Him, is as safe as the blood of Christ and the word of God can make him, and no power can take him out of that place (John x. 27-29; Ex. xii. 13). The lions' den and Joseph's tomb were made as sure as human authority and power could make them, but the seal of God makes as safe as God Himself all who are thus sealed. Not, as the hymn says, "safe in the arms of Jesus," but as one has well said, "safe as an arm of Jesus," for we are members of His body (Eph. v. 29, 30). The "whosoever" of the gospel is seen in the fact that these cities were for the benefit of strangers and sojourners as well as for Israelites (verse 9 and Num. xxxv. 15). It is truly grand that we can go to any and all in any land and every land with the blessed invitation for "whosoever will." The continued safety of the refugee depended upon his abiding in the city till the death of the high priest of that time (verse 6). Then he could return to his own house and city. Our High Priest has died and risen again and is alive forevermore and has all power in heaven and earth and has assured us that because He lives we shall live also (John xiv. 19).

As each city points to Him who is our refuge, so the name of each city tells something of His excellency and glory. Kedesh tells of His holiness. Without holiness no man shall see the Lord (Heb. xii. 14). The unrighteous shall not enter the kingdom (I Cor. vi. 9), but He is made to all who receive Him wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, redemption (I Cor. i. 30). He is our only holiness.

Shechem signifies shoulder, and we are said to dwell between His shoulders, and the government is on His shoulder, as also the key of the house of David (Deut. xxxiii. 12; Isa. ix. 6).

Hebron, as we saw in last lesson, signifies fellowship or inclosure. He wants us all for Himself—"A garden inclosed, a spring shut up, a fountain sealed" (S. of Sol. iv. 12)—for God, who is faithful, has called us unto the fellowship of His Son Jesus Christ our Lord (I Cor. i. 9).

Beser is said to signify metal ore or something precious, and the Spirit tells us through Peter that He is chosen of God and precious, precious to those who believe, and that His promises are exceeding great and precious (I Pet. ii. 4, 7; II Pet. i. 4).

Ramoth signifies exalted, and since now by faith we are at God's right hand in Him who has been exalted thither and as overcomers shall in due time sit with Him in His throne and come with Him in His glory (Eph. ii. 6, 7; Rev. iii. 21; Col. iii. 4).

Golan is suggestive of joy or rejoicing, and He has told us that He wants our joy to be full and that all our sorrow shall be turned into joy (xvi. 20).

A MYSTERIOUS CARD.

How Twain's Odd Request and Gave Mrs. Cleveland Shortest N.

When I was leaving Hartford for Washington upon one occasion my wife said: "I have written a small warning and put it in a pocket of your dress vest. When you are dressing to go to the eminent reception at the White House you will naturally put your fingers in your vest pocket, encounter the puny enemy, and you will find that little note there. Read it carefully and do as it tells you. I cannot be with you, and as I delegate my sentry duties to this little note. If I should give you the watching by word of mouth now it would pass from your head and be forgotten in a few minutes."

It was President Cleveland's first term. I had never seen his wife, the young, the beautiful, the good hearted, the sympathetic, the fascinating. Sure enough, just as I had finished dressing to go to the White House, I found that little note, which I had long ago forgotten. It was a grave little note, a serious little note, like its writer, but it made me laugh. Livy's gentle gravities often produced that effect upon me where the expert humorist's best joke would have failed, for I do not laugh easily.

When we reached the White House and I was shaking hands with the president he started to say something, but I interrupted him and said:

"If your excellency will excuse me I will come back in a moment, but now I have a very important matter to attend to, and it must be attended to at once."

I turned to Mrs. Cleveland, the young, the beautiful, the fascinating, and gave her my card, on the back of which I had written "He didn't," and I asked her to sign her name below those words.

She said: "He didn't? He didn't what?"

"Oh," I said, "never mind! We cannot stop to discuss that now. This is urgent. Won't you please sign your name?" I handed her a fountain pen.

"Why," she said, "I cannot commit myself in that way. Who is it that didn't? And what is it that he didn't?"

"Oh," I said, "time is flying, flying, flying! Won't you take me out of my distress and sign your name to it? It's all right. I give you my word it's all right."

She looked perplexed, but hesitatingly and mechanically she took the pen and said:

"I will sign it, I will take the risk. But you must tell me all about it right afterward, so that you can be arrested before you get out of the house in case there should be anything criminal about this."

Then she signed, and I handed her Mrs. Clemens' note, which was very brief, very simple and to the point. It said, "Don't wear your arctics in the White House." It made her shout, and at my request she summoned a messenger, and we sent that card at once to the mail on its way to Mrs. Clemens in Hartford.—Mark Twain's Autobiography in North American Review.

IN THE SAME BOAT.

A Story of Samuel Warren and Matthew Davenport Hill.

Sam Warren, the author of "Ten Thousand a Year," has been the subject of many anecdotes, none of them better than one which I first heard related about him by his friend, Matthew Davenport Hill.

Looking in one day at Warren's chambers, Hill noticed that he seemed a little troubled. "It is," said the lawyer-novelist, "most unfortunate. I ought to have dined tonight with the lord chancellor, but Mrs. Warren is about to present me with another olive branch. How can I leave her? I hope his lordship won't be annoyed at my putting him off." "Oh," returned Hill, "don't make yourself uneasy. I am one of the guests. I know him so well I can put it all right for you." With these words the visitor prepared to leave the room.

At first profusely grateful, Warren presently seemed a little perplexed and said: "By the bye, after all, I won't trouble you to say anything about me to the chancellor. Between ourselves, I have not been invited."

"Well," rejoined Hill, "make yourself comfortable on that point. For that matter, neither have I."—Pall Mall Gazette.

To Cure Blushing.

"A great many men blush," said a physician; "some so painfully that they come to me to be cured.

"The cure I recommend is an odd one. It is the abandonment of overheavy clothing, especially of woolen socks. Amazing it is how many male blushers have a predilection for thick socks of wool.

"But some blushers wear light enough clothes. To them I can only recommend a nerve treatment. I advise them to make speeches at banquets, to be witnesses in murder trials, to go to teas and dances, to develop, in short, the nerve as a wrestler develops his muscle.

"Blushing is a difficult disorder to cure. As a rule it passes away of itself when the victim reaches his thirty-fifth year."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

FINE SPIDER THREADS.

Cultivated Especially For the Use of Astronomers.

The cultivation of certain species of spiders solely for the fine threads which they weave for scientific uses has an important bearing upon astronomy.

No substitute for the spider's thread has yet been found for inserting the screw of the micrometer used for determining the positions and motions of the stars. Not only because of the remarkable fineness of the threads are they valuable, but because of their durable qualities.

The threads of certain spiders raised for astronomical purposes withstand changes in temperatures, so that often in measuring sun spots they are uninjured when the heat is so great that the lenses of the micrometer eyepiece are cracked.

These spider lines are only one-fifth to one-seventh of a thousandth of an inch in diameter, compared with which the threads of the silkworm are large and clumsy.

Each line is made up of several thousands of microscopic streams of fluid. Under the most powerful magnifying glass they appear true and round.

The work of placing these lines in the micrometer requires the delicate touch of experts, who operate with the aid of microscopes which magnify the line a thousand times. The lines are placed parallel with each other and two one-thousandths of an inch apart. —Stray Stories.

Buying Cooked Food.

In France it is a common thing for the wife to be out at work as well as the husband. From this circumstance, no doubt, have developed the facilities that country affords for obtaining ready cooked food outside the home. Whole meals can be purchased outside, and they are very good meals too. A whole fowl or a half one or a smaller portion can be bought hot or cold from the rotisseur. Soups and salads can be bought in the same way, and in shops where eggs are sold there is always a basket of red eggs as well as white ones, the red color being used to indicate that the eggs are cooked. All these things are sold at prices "within the reach of all," and in many homes scarcely any attempt is made to do cooking.

Belgium Blows Its Horn.

Belgium, like many continental countries, has its national board of advertising. The state, owning, as it does, the railways, must do everything in its power to increase the passenger traffic, and so England and the adjacent countries are extensively placarded with posters showing Belgium's beauty and pleasure spots. The principal attractions are Ostend and its casino, and the pictorial records of this resort have adorned the hoardings of Blackpool for many years past.—London Graphic.

A QUEER ISLAND.

No Bottom Found In Any of the Wells Bored In Curacoa.

Curacoa is one of the queerest little islands in the Caribbean sea. It lies sixty miles north of Venezuela, is about sixty miles long and twelve or fourteen miles wide, and it has a population of more than 50,000.

There is no means of procuring fresh water on the island except by saving rainwater in reservoirs. A number of wells have been bored under the supervision of the Dutch government, to which it belongs, but each ended in a failure.

A curious statement regarding these borings is made by the inhabitants of the island. They saw that in each and every case after a certain depth was reached the tools dropped out of sight, indicating that there is no solid foundation to the island. The borings were made in low places and through hills and in about thirty different places, each with the same ultimate result. A few wells have been dug to a lesser depth and brackish, unpleasant tasting water is obtained, fit only for manufacturing purposes.

The approach of the rainy season is always an interesting time. The water in the reservoir is low at this time, and the natives eagerly await the opportunity to gather a fresh supply. Clothing is never washed there in fresh water, but at all hours of the day the beach is alive with women beating the clothes with clubs on the rocks.—Buffalo News.

FEAR OF GHOSTS.

Harmless Visitors From Whom We All Shrink In Terror.

Deep down in the heart of man there abides a firm belief in the power of the dead to walk upon the earth and affright, if such be their pleasure, the souls of the living. Wise folks, versed in the sciences and fortified in mind against faith in aught that savors of the supernatural, laugh ideas of the kind to scorn, yet hardly one of them will dare to walk alone through a graveyard in the night, or if one be found so bold he will surely hasten his footsteps, unable wholly to subdue the fear of ghastly specters which may rise from the grass grown graves or emerge from moonlit tombs and follow on, for, strangely enough, the dead, if not actually hostile to the living, are esteemed dangerous and dreadful to encounter.

It used to be the fashion, says a writer in Lippincott's Magazine, to sweep away all such notions by saying that they had their origin in the childhood of the race and that they sprang from fear of the unknown. This unquestionably was the easiest way to dispose of them, but was it fair? The subject possesses intense interest for a great majority of mankind, and, though the existence of ghosts is unproved, there is undeniably a vast deal of testimony in their behalf that deserves serious and respectful consideration. Fortunately, within the last few years the attitude of science toward the problem has altogether changed, and, actuated by a new spirit of inquiry, the wise men have been engaged, thoughtfully and without prejudice, in studying it out.

While it cannot be said that any final and definite conclusions have as yet been reached, an immense amount of evidence has been sifted, enough to show pretty conclusively for one point that the traditional specter of the Cock Lane school, with clanking chain and attributes disagreeably suggestive of the grave, has no basis in fact. On the other hand, there are certain phantoms, altogether different in their characteristics, in whose behalf a mass of testimony is adduced far greater than would be required to establish complete proof in any ordinary case in a court of law. Nothing short of absolute demonstration in such a matter can be satisfactory, but the evidence in question certainly staggers incredulity.

Our fear of phantoms appears to spring from a dread of the unknown, the mysterious and the intangible. That it is a groundless terror is proved by the fact that in many thousands of cases of alleged spectral appearances subjected during the last few years to painstaking investigation not a single instance has been found in which an injury was inflicted by the ghost upon the person or persons to whom it presented itself. So that, even if we are to accept apparitions as veritable, we ought to regard them with curiosity rather than with apprehension, and instead of trying to avoid such supernatural visitors we should eagerly seek an opportunity to be haunted for the sake of observing for ourselves phenomena so intensely interesting.

BROILING.

If the fire should be too hot, sprinkle salt over it.

Birds and other things which need to be halved should be broiled inside first.

Always grease the gridiron well and have it hot before the meat is placed on it.

Never put your fork in the lean part of meat on the gridiron, as it allows the juice to escape.

Fish should be buttered and sprinkled with flour, which will prevent the skin from adhering to the gridiron.

Remember that a hot, clear fire is necessary for broiling all small articles. They should be turned often to be cooked evenly without being burned.

Cover the gridiron with a tin pan or a baking pan. The sooner the meat is cooked without burning the better. The pan holds the heat and often prevents a stray line of smoke from touching the meat.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Dandy for Burns.

Dr. Bergin, Paris, Ill., writes: "I have used Ballard's Snow Liniment; always recommended it to my friends as I am confident there is no better made. 'It is a dandy for burns.' Those who live on farms are especially liable to many accidental cuts, burns, bruises, which heal rapidly when Ballard's Snow Liniment is applied. It should always be kept in the house for cases of emergency." 25c, 50c and $1.00. Sold by Upchurch Drug co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thorsby.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of an execution issued out of the Circuit Court of Chilton county, and State of Alabama, and to me directed, whereby I am commanded to make the amount of a certain judgment recently obtained against John W. Handley, out of the goods, chattels, lands and tenements of the said John W. Handley I have levied on the following property to wit:

Lots No. 10 and 11, Block 12 in the town of Clanton, Alabama, containing two acres more or less, lying east of L. & N. R. R.

Therefore, according to said command, I shall expose for sale, at public auction, all the right, title and interest of the above named John W. Handley, in and to the above described property on MONDAY, the 6th day of NOVEMBER, 1905, during the legal hours of sale at the Court House door of Chilton county, in Clanton, Ala.

Dated at Clanton, Ala., this 6th day of October, 1905. JOHN S. GAYNES, Sheriff of Chilton county, Ala.

Made The Deaf Hear In One Mi

Remarkable Demonstration Given by C... Strange Philanthropist Before Immense T...

Removes Immense Parasite From System of Well-... With a Few Doses of Peculiar Medicine.—Refuses ... Services.

Chicago, Oct. 30. Special.—Excitement over the marvelous cures of L. F. Cooper continue unabated.

One of the largest crowds that has yet called on the noted philanthropist visited him yesterday, and a remarkable demonstration of his power was given before the entire audience. Selecting an elderly gentleman, whom he noticed carrying an ear trumpet, Cooper motioned for him to come forward. He poured a few drops of peculiar liquid into the man's ears, and then rubbed them softly for a moment. Stepping quickly backward to a distance of sixty feet, he asked in an ordinary conversational tone, "Can you hear me?" A look of surprise and delight spread over the man's face as he answered, "Yes, I hear you perfectly."

The gentleman was Mr. John Auftning, 37, Boston avenue. Mr. Auftning stated that he had been deaf for many years. He said:

"For nearly nineteen years I heard nothing. I had a terrible, rumbling noise constantly in my head that was almost maddening. It appeared at about the time I lost my sense of hearing, and no matter what treatment or remedies I tried, I could find no relief. Once in a long while I could just barely distinguish a noise, but in all those long years I was unable to hear a human voice. I had given up hope and had resigned myself to a life of silence when I read of the Cooper preparations.

Thirty days ago I began the Cooper treatment, and my condition was almost immediately improved. I began to have confidence and took the remedies faithfully. Now, thanks to the Cooper medicines alone, I can hear as well as I ever did in my life. My family, and every one that knows me, will testify to the wonderful cure in my case. I shall always be grateful to Mr. Cooper for what he has done for me, and I want other people who are deaf to know that there is yet hope for them."

Many of those who called had come to thank Mr. Cooper for what he had done for them, they having previously written him a statement of their condition and having followed his instructions, had returned to tell him of their cures.

A gentleman by the name of Emil Winkler exhibited a glass jar, containing a parasite eighty feet long, which he claimed had passed from his system after taking seven doses of Cooper's medicine. The parasite was alive and squirming, and Mr. Winkler was anxious to know what it was.

When Cooper informed him the cause of his ill health had been removed, he was greatly relieved, and was profuse in his thanks to the philanthropist.

Thousands of people viewed the parasite, and expressed surprise that such a thing could exist in the human system.

Mr. Winkler is a well-known electrician, living at 182 East Ohio street. In speaking of his experience, he said:

"For five years I have been more or less complaining. I have had severe headaches and any food that I would eat would nauseate me. I would have bad dreams almost every night, dizzy spells would compell me to quit work. Black spots would appear before my eyes when stooping over and raising quickly. I would feel tired most of the time, in fact, I have had no life in me to speak of for the last five years. I tried various treatments, and one physician in St. Louis was recommended to me and I was under his treatment some time, but as usual I obtained no relief.

"So many people asked me to try the Cooper preparations I decided to do so, and after using it for a few days this awful [illegible] from my system. I [illegible] ter already, and I want to [illegible] here that I thank Mr. [illegible] hundred times for what [illegible] cine has done for me. I [illegible] take $5,000 and have [illegible] back in my system again."

A story with a touch [illegible] was related by a gentleman [illegible] sant with the facts that [illegible] the kindly nature of [illegible] thropist, and explains [illegible] degree his wonderful hold [illegible] people.

A delicate woman [illegible] bore traces of care and [illegible] and whose frail body was [illegible] by the ravages of disease, [illegible] the Public Drug Store [illegible] for Mr. Cooper, but he was [illegible] the little woman turned [illegible] signedly, but sadly disappointed.

To her it was another [illegible] misfortune, and she [illegible] weary steps toward the [illegible] where a sick husband would [illegible] her return. But her disappointment was of short duration. Mr. Cooper was just then [illegible] the street. Noting the [illegible] look and halting step, he [illegible] quickly forward and [illegible] carefully over the crossing. A few kindly, well directed [illegible] he learned that she had [illegible] call upon Mr. Cooper [illegible] medicine for her sick husband [illegible] had been ill for a long time [illegible] to provide even the necessities for his little family.

The poor woman was [illegible] astonished when she found [illegible] was talking to Mr. Cooper. He assisted her back to [illegible] store, supplied her with [illegible] the required medicine, [illegible] with a generous handful [illegible] and sent her home with [illegible] heart and smiles shining [illegible] tears. That night a big [illegible] groceries was left at the [illegible] and it was not hard to guess [illegible] was the donor.

Another feature of Mr. [illegible] it to this city, and one that [illegible] tached a great deal of [illegible] the many cures of those who [illegible] have been effected by the [illegible] remedies. Among the [illegible] made statements on this [illegible] Louise Herman, 945 North [illegible] who said:

"I have for years been [illegible] from rheumatism and kidney [illegible] plaint. At times I was [illegible] weak and my back was [illegible] My limbs were very [illegible] len and I was in a very [illegible] condition. I could not [illegible] night, always felt tired [illegible] morning, and would often [illegible] were headaches. My health [illegible] tirely broken down and I [illegible] gun to feel as if life was [illegible] living. I had tried different [illegible] cines, but all to no avail. [illegible] seemed to help me and I [illegible] know what it was to be [illegible] or happy day.

"One evening I was [illegible] the papers what great results [illegible] er's New Discovery and Dyspepsia [illegible] lief were accomplishing and [illegible] and I made up my mind [illegible] them a trial, and if they were [illegible] the papers said they were [illegible] then I would surely receive [illegible] benefit.

"So I purchased some of the [illegible] icine and after the first few [illegible] noticed that my sleep was [illegible] restful and that the pain [illegible] limbs was not so bad. I [illegible] using the medicine and after [illegible] weeks I had nearly regained [illegible] health. I can never say enough [illegible] about these medicines, for I never [illegible] expected to see a well day [illegible] and here I am enjoying life [illegible] my friends, and all due to Cooper's [illegible] derful New Discovery.

"I want to say that Dr. [illegible] greatest remedy in the world [illegible] for it has made me a well man [illegible] where all others failed."

A Fellow Feeling.

"I don't believe," said Mrs. Henry Peck, "that I would be afraid of a man eating tiger."

"I don't believe you'd need to, M'ria," responded Hen Peck. "He'd recognize a kindred spirit."—Houston Post.

There is a number of people who are under an erroneous impression. They think that they never control enough money to start a bank account. In this they are mistaken. We solicit small accounts as well as large. And we handle the business of both with our best care. We believe that you ought to have a bank account, and we offer you our services.

THE CLANTON BANK

CLANTON, ALA.

Many people seem to think that unless they can open a Savings Account with not less than $50.00 or $100.00, it is not worth the while to begin. This is not a correct position to take. If a person cannot open an account with more than $1.00, and really desires to get some money ahead, then he should begin with even $1.00. The first dollar saved and put in bank, is the initial step on the way to prosperity. "Great oaks from little acorns grow." As a rule, the person who "Puts off" the opening of a Savings Account until he has a large amount to deposit, is not likely to ever have a bank account. We solicit your account.

Editor Banner—Will you please allow me space in your paper to tell the people of our trip on the gulf and sea. You can sleep your eyes out and turn your insides out. Some of the boys have not been to the table since we left the shore. We have been on the water three days and nights without seeing anything at all. Some ladies and men are sick, I've not been sick at all. Four are from Birmingham and one sick out of the four. When we got up this morning, one of the young men from Montgomery went up on the second deck and dropped us a bird that had flew up there during the night. We see droves of flying fish every day. Mr. Brown from Birmingham and I pass off the time by playing ball; some of the men are playing poker on board and some of the ladies are playing five up and set back. All of them are playing for what is in it, from 10c to $1.00 a game. Some are drunk and some are drinking, all are having a big time. The Bible says that the world will be destroyed by fire next time, but let me tell you there is lots of water here yet. Well, I will close, hoping to see Alabama again some day.

NOTICE.

In accordance with an act of the last Legislature, requiring the Sheriffs of their respective counties, to procure from the office of the United States Internal Revenue Collector, a list of all persons or corporations in their counties to whom licenses have been issued, for the sale of Spirituous, Vinous or Malt Liquors, and to publish the same in some newspaper published in said county.

I have made this examination, and find that there has been only one license issued for the county of Chilton, and that to the Clanton Dispensary for this year from Jan. 1st 1907 to this the 23rd day of Oct. 1907.

Card of Thanks.

Dear Editor:—Will you allow my space to offer my sincere thanks to the people of Clanton and community. I was sick and they visited me and ministered unto my wants in time of need. Now, I think I will be well again soon and my earnest plea is in behalf of those my beloved friends that they may be blessed with the choice blessings God can give them from on high. I will never cease to appreciate their kindness to me at one and all times. With love and best wishes to all,

A Warning.

"Fore warned is fore armed," is an old adage. As it is very applicable you will please excuse its conspicious place at the beginning of this communication. We want to say just a word to the gentlemen. You know we are going to have a "Spelling Bee" at the Court House, Friday night, Nov. 8th, from 7:30 to 11 o'clock. The young ladies, mothers and children want to go. Their going depends in a large measure upon you. First we would say to the single men, if you do not attend and the next time you call to see your "fair one," she appears cold and indifferent toward you, don't be surprised, just remember you didn't take her to the "Spelling Bee." The food husband will know at once the cause of trouble in his home. We daresay if he considers the matter beforehand the wife and dear children will be there. The old Blue Back Speller will be used. We want everybody who will, to spell. If you do not want to spell you cannot afford to miss the fun of listening. Some of the best talent in town will give some select readings. A fine musical program is being arranged. We charge only 20c apiece; 10c apiece for children. $2.00 will bring a family of eight; if you have a sweetheart, 40c is all it will cost you. If neither, just 20. Refreshments absolutely free. We will have nothing to sell.

CENTRAL STOCK SOLD

Road, It Is Said, Has Been Purchased by Harriman.

THORNE GETS PRICE HE PAID

Harriman Has Plans For the Road in Connection with the Illinois Central Lines—Will Give His Lines Another Outlet to the Atlantic.

New York, Nov. 2.—According to the Times, Saturday, E. H. Harriman was the buyer of the Central of Georgia stock sold last week by Oakleigh Thorne and Marsden J. Perry and he has plans for the road in connection with the Illinois Central lines.

The two roads connect at Birmingham, Ala., and the possession of the Central of Georgia will give the Harriman lines another outlet to the Atlantic.

A close associate of Mr. Harriman when questioned regarding the purchase of the Central of Georgia by that capitalist remarked that Mr.

EDWARD H. HARRIMAN,
Head of Union Pacific, Southern Pacific and other railroads.

Harriman had not been idly watching recent events. The Times says further that in the recent annual report of the Illinois Central, Nov. 1 was fixed as the date on which its lines to Birmingham were to be completed and that with that date comes the news that Mr. Harriman's influence in southern territory is to be extended beyond Birmingham eastward to the seaboard at Savannah and westward by way of Chattanooga, Birmingham, and Montgomery.

It is known that Messrs. Thorne and Perry paid about $8,600,000 for the $25,000,000 of Central of Georgia stock which they purchased last summer at the Richmond Terminal reorganization committee, and it is presumed in the financial district, the paper says, that the Harriman interests took over the road at not far from the same figure.

ARRESTS CAUSE SENSATION.

Prominent Men Indicted in Connection With Tobacco Depredations.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 2.—A dispatch from Clarksville, Tenn., to the Banner says that Dr. Thomas Hoskins, George Saunders and Jones Cross, three prominent citizens of Montgomery county, have been arrested on the charge of scraping plant beds and pulling up tobacco.

The indictment of the men is the outcome of depredations which have occurred in the county during the past few months, in which a large amount of tobacco was destroyed and many threats made.

All of the men arrested are prominently connected with the Dark Tobacco Growers association. The arrests have caused much excitement.

Federal Aid for 'Frisco Banks.

San Francisco, Nov. 2.—The United States government came to the assistance of the San Francisco savings banks, Friday, announcing through a telegram that it had taken steps to expedite the shipment of coin to the Pacific coast. A vast sum, said to be in the neighborhood of $10,000,000, is to be transferred by the government for the use of the San Francisco savings banks. The government has coin in San Francisco to the amount of $243,000,000. Of this sum $203,000,000 is stored in the mint and $40,000,000 in the subtreasury.

Mail Clerk Has Leg Broken.

WIFE KILLS HUSBAND.

People of Apalachicola, Fla., Shocked Over Family Tragedy.

Pensacola, Fla., Nov. 4.—While suffering from temporary insanity Mrs. Marie Hickey, wife of Hon. Patrick Hickey, of Apalachicola, Sunday morning cut the throat of her husband who lay asleep in bed and then committed suicide by cutting her throat from ear to ear.

The tragedy is one of the most terrible in the entire history of Florida in years and has created much interest through the prominence of the parties. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hickey were prominent and wealthy residents of Apalachicola and connected with some of the most prominent families of that section of the state.

The body of Mrs. Hickey was found in front of the home. The head had been almost severed from the body with a razor.

The people making the discovery quickly gave the alarm and when others arrived and the home was entered the husband was lying unconscious upon the bed with his throat cut. At first there was a suspicion of foul play but after an investigation the coroner's jury arrived at the conclusion that Mrs. Hickey had first cut the throat of her husband while he lay asleep in bed and then committed suicide. That Mrs. Hickey was insane at the time there is no doubt. Three weeks ago she was taken by her husband from a private asylum in Georgia.

She had several times been under treatment in sanitariums and the last time remained for several months and was dismissed as being sound of mind. Mrs. Hickey up to within two years ago was one of the principal milliners in Florida conducting an establishment on Bay street in Jacksonville under the name of Miss Murat. Her maiden name was Walls.

STATE PROHIBITION SURE.

Little Doubt Now Will Be Passed by the Alabama Legislature.

Montgomery, Ala., Nov. 4.—With each passing day evidence is accumulating that the special session of the legislature, called to convene next Thursday, will pass a law providing for state prohibition in Alabama.

The success of the prohibitionists in Birmingham and Jefferson county has wonderfully brightened the advocates of state prohibition. Had the campaign failed in that county the representatives in both houses of the legislature from the Alabama district would have opposed a state prohibition law. As it is now, they will support it. Since the election in Jefferson, agitation in the various counties which have called local prohibition elections has been renewed with fresh vigor.

Since prohibition was not among the things Governor Comer named in his call, a state law will require a two-thirds vote in both houses. From the present outlook there seems not the shadow of a doubt that it will be secured.

Alabama has sixty-seven counties, and all but fifteen are now dry. Rev. Brooks Lawrence, chairman of the Anti-Saloon League, in Alabama, and A. H. Carmichael, speaker of the house of representatives, announce that steps have been taken to secure the introduction of a state prohibition bill immediately upon the convening of the extraordinary session.

TWO NEGROES ARE LYNCHED.

Their Bodies Are Found Hanging to Telegraph Poles.

Mobile, Ala., Nov. 4.—Abe Sumrall and Hank Lucas, negroes, were lynched some time Saturday morning at Vinegar Bend, Ala., near here.

Sumrell murdered Julio Boza, a young Cuban, on Monday night last while he was trying to arrest him for burglary. Lucas' crime was the protecting of Sumrell from officers of the law and a posse of citizens.

The bodies were found hanging to telegraph poles south of the town by early risers. Sumrell's body was a mile away from that of Lucas', and both were hanging from the poles.

It was at first decided to burn the negroes at the stake, but wiser heads prevailed.

A. G. S. Has New Superintendent.

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 4.—It was announced Sunday that J. W. Evans, master mechanic of the Alabama Great Southern, has received the appointment as superintendent of the road to succeed R. H. Boswell. Mr. Boswell goes with the Seaboard, it is understood, in the capacity of superintendent of transportation.

Another County Goes Dry.

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 4.—Talladega county went dry in the election held there Saturday. The prediction of five to one for prohibition has more than probably been carried out by the voters. The petition for a prohibition election had on it a majority of the people residing in the county.

Hanged Herself with U. S. Flag.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 4.—Mrs. Cornelia McKelvey Sunday twisted a United States flag into a rope, and with it committed suicide by hanging herself to a closet door. Her body was discovered by her 10-year-old granddaughter. Melancholia is supposed to have prompted the act.

NO DECISION REACHED

Rate Question Considered by Trio of Governors.

WILL COME UP IN FUTURE

Much Time Was Consumed on Passenger Rates in Affecting Georgia, Alabama and North Carolina—All Passing with Progress Made.

Atlanta, Nov. 1.—With the issuance of a formal statement declaring that the conference had been most satisfactory and that arrangements had been made for co-operation in the investigation of facts and law connected with the duty of the states to the public and the transportation companies, but with no announcement as to any definite agreement as to the passenger or freight rates to be charged, the conference between Governor B. B. Comer, of Alabama; Governor Robert B. Glenn of North Carolina, and Governor Hoke Smith, of Georgia, adjourned at an early hour Friday night.

However, all concerned were well satisfied with the progress made during the session. The chief executives of the different states are not yet done with the question and at an early date will make it up among themselves by communication with the intention of arriving at some decision.

Special reference was given to passenger rates as affecting the three states and practically the entire time o fthe session was devoted to discussion along this line.

Ask for Rate Increase.

Just before the conference began a letter, signed by a score or more merchants in Atlanta, was handed to Governor Smith asking that a flat rate of 2 3-4 cents be put on in Georgia and other southern states materially increasing the present rate in effect.

Peculiar Situation.

It is a peculiar situation faced by the conference. North Carolina has a flat rate of 2 1-4 cents a mile, fixed by the general assembly of that state, and which can neither be altered nor changed again. Governor Comer, of Alabama, has recently signed an agreement with the Southern and other allied lines accepting a flat basis of 2 2-4 cents a mile, effective Dec. 1, which is binding on both parties, while Georgia, under the railroad commission order issued during the Terrell administration and which is being operative, provides a sliding scale of from 2 to 2 cents.

From this it seems there is a wide chasm dividing the three states on this subject.

Governors Comer and Glenn left for their homes Friday night after the adjournment of the conference.

HEAVY VERDICT RENDERED.

Former President of Wabash Must Pay Large Sum, It Is Said.

New York, Nov. 2.—A verdict of $589,000 against Joseph Ramsey, Jr., former president of the Wabash railroad, in a suit brought by John S. Jones, a financier and coal land operator, was handed down Friday in the supreme court.

Mr. Jones sued George J. Gould, William E. Guy and Mr. Ramsey as individuals, to recover $460,000, which he alleged to be due him from the three defendants for securing for them 50,000 acres of coal lands in southern Ohio. A part of the money sued for, according to Mr. Jones, represented sums advanced by him in payment for the land and the rest included his commissions, expenses and interest.

Justice Goff held that neither Mr. Gould nor Mr. Guy were liable, and the verdict consequently was rendered only against Mr. Ramsey. It represented the full amount of the suit, plus costs and interest since 1902.

Stork Busy at This Place.

Roebling, N. J., Nov. 2.—President Roosevelt has granted this place a postoffice on account of the wonderful activity of the stork hereabouts. A delegation of citizens called at the White House and told him that there has been births in nine-tenths of the 200 families since the place was established as a manufacturing center two years ago. Before the delegation got back home Mr. Roosevelt had abolished rural free delivery in Roebling by appointing A. L. Major postmaster.

Strike Over at New Orleans.

New Orleans, La., Nov. 2.—Following a meeting of the Commercial Telegraphers' union here, at which it was voted to permit all operators to go back to work who so desired, officials of the union Friday announced that so far as New Orleans is concerned, the telegraph strike is a thing of the past. During the past twenty-four hours about 50 applications have been made to the two telegraph companies, but only about half this number have been reinstated.

Rewards Offered.

Montgomery, Ala., Nov. 2.—Governor Comer has offered a reward of $100 for the arrest and conviction of Rachael Watson and William Mayberry, of Lauderdale county, and Walter Anthony, of Crenshaw county, all charged with murder.

THIS MAN WAS GRATEFUL.

For Kind Given Him When Broke Sends Benefactor $1,000 Bill.

New York, Nov. 2.—On Christmas eve, in 1898, John McNulty, a man in pathetic circumstances, while returning to his home aided a beggar who stopped him on the street and applied for alms. The man insisted on getting his benefactor's name and address, saying that some day, perhaps, he might be able to show his appreciation.

McNulty thought no more of the matter until Friday night when upon returning from his work he opened a letter which had come for him and found enclosed a thousand-dollar bill and a brief letter which read:

"Dear Sir: Enclosed you will find $1,000 in payment for your kindness and your merry Christmas given to me nine years ago when I was broke and wanted a meal. I have traveled considerably in many places since that night but I have always remembered your kindness. Take this and use it. Believe me, yours, P. P."

McNulty has no idea of the identity of the grateful man.

The letter was mailed from the financial district in this city.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION.

Question May Come Up at Extra Session of Alabama Legislature.

Montgomery, Ala., Nov. 2.—Dr. W. B. Crumpton, head of the Anti-Saloon league in Alabama, is authority for the statement that an attempt, which promises success, will be made at the extra session of the legislature to establish constitutional prohibition in the state. He is quite sure that it will be no trouble to pass a bill for prohibition and thinks it will be equally easy to have permission given to vote on a constitutional amendment to that effect.

Dr. Crumpton also made it very plain that the league is going to make the fight for a general prohibition bill at the special session. He does not think such determination is a violation of any pledge implied or otherwise made with regard to the local option and other bills passed at the other two sessions.

DAUGHTERS OF CONFEDERACY.

Georgia Division of the Order Elect New Officers.

Augusta, Ga., Nov. 2.—Officers were elected Friday morning for the Georgia division of the Daughters of the Confederacy. It was the decision of the convention to erect the Wirtz monument at Andersonville, as was decided at the Macon convention two years ago. The question, however, provided a lengthy discussion. The treasurer of the fund for the monument reported $1,465 in hand and $50 additionals promised.

Five Accused of Murder.

Linden, Ala., Nov. 2.—At the conclusion of the preliminary hearings that have run over three days, the five well known farmers accused of the murder of Luke Bradford were held in jail without bail. The accused are Bert Huckabee, his son Wiley Huckabee, and Sam Ford and his sons, Spencer and William. The boys confessed that they killed Bradford for his money three weeks ago, but swore their fathers were not implicated. Bradford was a hermit farmer of Octagon, who had considerable money. His body was terribly mutilated. All of the persons are well known in west Alabama.

Alabama Vets To Meet.

Montgomery, Ala., Nov. 2.—General George W. Harrison, commanding the Alabama division, United Confederate Veterans, has issued the order for the state reunion to be held in Montgomery on Nov. 13 and 14. The order is made public by Colonel Harvey Jones, adjutant general and chief of staff. Each camp will be entitled to one delegate for every 20 active members and every camp may have as many as two. The headquarters of General Harrison and his staff will be at the New Exchange hotel.

Fire on Norwegian Bark.

Pensacola, Fla., Nov. 2.—With her cargo of 500 sacks of kainit on fire and the crew exhausted from fighting the flames, the Norwegian bark Baroness, from Rosfva for Pensacola, was towed into port Friday. Tug boats immediately went to the rescue of the vessel and got the fire under control. The fire was caused by spontaneous combustion, and while the vessel has probably not been damaged to any extent, the damage to the cargo will probably be heavy.

Accidentally Kills Sister.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Nov. 2—The 10-year-old daughter of Richard Millihen, a farmer, living near King's Point, was shot and instantly killed at 6:30 Friday morning. Her brother, 16 years old, was preparing for a hunt. In passing out the door with a shotgun the hammer struck the door facing, discharging a load of shot into his little sister's head. The girl's head was almost torn off.

More Gold for United States.

London, Nov. 2—The Bank of England's stock of gold was further depleted Friday by $20,000 pounds in fine gold and 100,000 pounds in American eagles which were withdrawn for shipment to the United States.

MUTINOUS OUTBREAK

Russian Sailors Shell the Port of Vladivostok.

KILLED THEIR COMMANDER

Batteries Ashore Answered the Fire, Killing Mutineers and Destroying Their Vessel—One Woman Took a Part in Mutiny.

St. Petersburg, Nov. 2.—According to the official report of the recent mutinous outbreaks of sailors at Vladivostok the crews of three torpedo boat destroyers, the Skory, Serdity and Trevotshay, mutinied, hoisted their flag and shelled the port, doing considerable damage to buildings and killing some soldiers and civilians.

The Skory, on board of which were revolutionary agitators, including one woman, took the lead in the mutiny, the crew rising at the instance of the agitators, killing the commander of the boat and wounding th eother officers who were overpowered and confined below decks.

The fire of the rebellious torpedo boat destroyers was answered by the batteries ashore, and from the gunboat Manjour and the torpedo boat destroyers Grosovoy, Smely and several others.

They surrounded the Skory and poured a raking fire into her, which battered her to pieces, exploded her two boilers and caused fire to break out on board. Nearly all the mutineers of the Skory wer ekilled on the vessel. The three or four survivors threw themselves into the sea.

The mutiny on board the Trevotshny was quelled by her own crew after six of the mutineers had been killed and six wounded.

General Count Unterburger, commanding the military district at the Amur, has arrived at Vladivostok and assumed charge of the situation.

The United States embassy here received a dispatch from the consul at Vladivostok that the American who was wounded during the bombardment of Vladivostok by the mutinous torpedo boat destroyers is Harry Nielert, an employe of the Pacific Commercial company, who, it is believed, was struck by a shell.

GOOD AS GOLD.

Business Men Endorse Clearing House Certificate Plan.

Atlanta, Nov. 1.—The immediate and enthusiastic endorsement by the business men of Atlanta of the emergency plan adopted by the clearing house banks to furnish a supplemental currency was no more than was to be expected.

The certificates are backed by the combined credit and resources of all the banks making up the Atlanta clearing house. They are as good as gold. Leading merchants posted notices that these certificates will be accepted as cash in all transactions.

The circulation of these certificates simply means that $2,000,000 additional currency will be turned loose in Atlanta. When the emergency demand for it ceases, it will be retired.

The banks, following the lead of others in the larger cities throughout the country, are simply doing what the government failed to do for the business of the country. Their action has had an all-powerful influence in easing the situation.

Gets Low Water Rates.

Charlotte, N. C., Nov. 1.—The board of water commissioners have just voted to put the new water rates into effect the first of the year. The new rates are an increase of about 20 per cent over the old rates, which were graduated from 25 to 7 cents, per one thousand gallins, according to the amount used. Charlotte owns her own water plant and in the past municipal ownership has resulted in a large saving to the citizens.

Banquet for Editor Graves.

Atlanta, Nov. 1.—Hon. John Temple Graves, editor of the Atlanta Georgian, who will assume editorship of the New York American within a few weeks, will be tendered a banquet by the Kappa Alpha fraternity of Atlanta and the state on Nov. 12, eve of his departure for his new field of work.

To Endow Professorship.

New York, Nov. 1.—The committee appointed by the National Lumber Manufacturers' association to look after obtaining $150,000 to endow a professorship of lumbering in the Yale Forest school has reported that the subscriptions to date amount to $67,500.

Balloon Traveled 1,800 Kilometers.

Paris, Nov. 1.—A toy balloon, one of many released by the newspaper, the Eclair, has been found in Finland. It traveled a distance of 1,120 kilometers from Paris, thus beating by 28 kilometers the long distance balloon record made by Count Deslavanix.

Puts His Prisoner in Chains.

Madrid, Nov. 1.—Dispatches from Tetuan convey a native report to the effect that several days ago Caid Mc. Lain escaped in the night but was recaptured and put in chains by order of Abdul-Aziz.

SCOOP BOARD.

For Attaching to the Wagon Bed.

[illegible] with grippers and other [illegible] to the wagon box [illegible] is necessary when unloading [illegible] take out by hand enough [illegible] and to permit the use of [illegible] so that the end gate [illegible] part of the load fall on the [illegible] floor, causing extra labor in [illegible] up in baskets and so [illegible] are now loaded on your wagons.

[illegible] drawings in the accompany [illegible] give an outline of such a [illegible]

SCOOP BOARD OPEN.

[illegible] of the scoop should be six [illegible] inches more than the height [illegible] the box and wide enough so [illegible] sides will just pass over and [illegible] against the sides of the box. [illegible] may be fastened, as indicated [illegible] pieces nailed as cleats on the [illegible] of the scoop, but we find it [illegible] have the chain pass continuously [illegible] one side around under the [illegible] opposite side. This gives [illegible] port to the scoop when down, [illegible] greatest weight is on it [illegible] staples, large enough to receive [illegible] link fastened with an [illegible] as shown in the second cut. [illegible] carefully clinched or bolted [illegible] the wagon box.

The "hinge" a bar is bolted to [illegible] of the box, extending two [illegible] inches on either side, over [illegible] end of the scoop side board [illegible] board being hollowed out to [illegible] bar, as is shown, the bar [illegible] ended at that point to allow it [illegible] free and firm in turning up [illegible]

[illegible] of this arrangement for the [illegible] ordinary strap hinges may be [illegible] hook and eye hinges, that [illegible] purchased at the hardware [illegible] made by a blacksmith, put on, [illegible] holes bored pointing in the [illegible] direction, as with these last there [illegible] advantage of being able to slip [illegible]

[illegible] corner brace is placed on [illegible] rail outside, the scoop when [illegible] so tail gate will serve as [illegible] tail brace against the [illegible] of the end of the box when [illegible] ended.

Fencing the Farm.

[illegible] little money to divide and [illegible] a farm by fencing with a [illegible] wire, and a good woven wire [illegible] about as good as can be built. [illegible] the cost and a good profit right [illegible] start for a farmer to have [illegible] fenced so that h. can keep [illegible] at home and also to keep other [illegible] stock away. The farmer [illegible] work and not spend all his [illegible] running after his stock, re- [illegible] writer in Farm and Fireside. [illegible] localities the old rail fence [illegible] rotted down can be used [illegible] or built into a fence on [illegible] of the farm where the good [illegible] but quite so important. The [illegible] board fences harbor weeds, [illegible] to decay and are very ex- [illegible] in the long run. A good wire [illegible] fence is clean and thoroughly [illegible] ory. By spending a few dollars [illegible] good fence the farm will in- [illegible] value, so that after all it is [illegible] of saving money.

Saving Grasses and Grain.

SHELBY county voted to go dry by an overwhelming majority on Monday.

According to a new law all the expenses of the County Superintendent of Education are paid by the county, so that his salary of 4 per centum is all clear. Chilton pays $731 45 to the Superintendent of Education.

During the six months the Clanton Dispensary was in operation, a net profit of $4,131.80 was made, which has been turned over by Dispenser N. A. Kicker, one half to the Town Clerk, P. D. Wilson, and the other half to County Supt of Education J. W. Moore, $2,065 90 each This nice little sum will help both town and county considerably.

Judge Thomas G. Jones caused a sensation on Tuesday, when he held court at Birmingham and removed N. L. Steele, who had been appointed by Judge Hundley, from the office of Referee in Bankruptcy, on the grounds that Judge Hundley was not authorized to make the appointment.

PINEAPPLES.

A Time When They Sold For $10 Each in San Francisco.

In 1851 pineapples were rare in San Francisco. One day in that year one of the passengers who had crossed the Isthmus of Darien before leaving Panama purchased from one of the natives of that place a dozen pineapples for a quarter of a dollar, and when he landed in San Francisco he had six left. He was carrying these from the landing place at the foot of Vallejo street, where there were boat steps at the end of a twenty foot wharf, which new arrivals approached by Whitehall boats from the steamers that in those days anchored in the stream 300 yards from shore. The man was accosted suddenly by a stranger who asked him what he wanted "for that lot of pineapples."

"They are not for sale."

"But I want them," said the Californian.

"I'll sell you three," said the new arrival, who on the voyage had heard that San Francisco people were liberal buyers, and he added, "but they'll cost you $5 each."

"Take 'em," was the curt reply, and the fruit changed owners, the resident passing over a Spanish coin known then as a gold "ounce," worth $16 in trade.

Before the new purchaser had moved across Battery street, where the transaction had taken place, he was accosted by an acquaintance, who asked him to let him have the fruit. A dicker followed for two of them, the acquaintance paying $10 apiece for them. Later in the day the first purchaser was boasting of the rapid manner by which he had cleared $5 and still had a fine pineapple for supper.—San Francisco Call.

Youthful Financier.

This really happened in New York the other day:

Displeased Parent—Molly, I find you have been buying three pairs of gloves without my permission. Why did you do so? Miss Molly (aged twelve)—Why, daddy, I was obliged to have some gloves; I hadn't a pair to wear! Displeased Parent—It was wrong of you to buy the gloves without the permission either of your mamma or myself. Miss Molly—Well, never mind, daddy, dear; they won't cost anything. I had them charged.—New York Post.

The Value of Diamonds.

The value of the diamond is at so much per carat, and up to a certain limit the value per carat increases as the size of the stone increases. When a carat diamond is quoted at $125, a diamond weighing a half a carat is counted at the rate of $75 per carat, three-quarter carat diamonds at $100 per carat, one and one-quarter carat diamonds at $140 per carat, one and one-half carat diamonds at $150 per carat, one and three-quarter carat diamonds at $180 per carat, and two carat stones at $200 per carat. Stones weighing more than two carats sell at about the same rate as that quoted for two carat stones, and do not increase as rapidly owing to the more limited demand for the larger sized stones.—New York Herald.

To Calculate Longevity.

"Bacon took a deep interest in longevity and its earmarks," said a physician, "and Bacon's signs of long life and of short life are as true today as they ever were. You won't live long. Bacon pointed out, if you have soft, fine hair, a fine skin, quick growth, large head, early corpulence, short neck, small mouth, brittle and separated teeth and fat ears. Your life, barring accidents, will be very lengthy if you have slow growth, coarse hair, a rough skin, deep wrinkles in the forehead, firm flesh, a large mouth, wide nostrils, strong teeth set close together and a hard, gristly ear."

A Case of Disbelief.

HOW THE MOON LOOKS.

Queer Variance in Impressions as to the Same Object.

I asked my men to compare the size of the full moon to that of some object held in the hand at arm's length. I explained the question carefully and said that they were to describe an object just large enough when seen at arm's length to cover the whole moon. My list of answers begins as follows: Quarter of a dollar, fair sized cantaloupe; at the horizon, large dinner plate; overhead, dessert plate; my watch, six inches in diameter, silver dollar, hundred times as large as my watch, man's head, fifty cent piece, nine inches in diameter, grape fruit, carriage wheel, butter plate, orange, ten feet, two inches, one cent piece, schoolroom clock, a pea, soup plate, fountain pen, lemon pie, palm of the hand, three feet in diameter—enough to show again the overwhelming manifoldness of the impressions received.

To the surprise of my readers perhaps it may be added at once that the only man who was right was the one who compared it to a pea. It is most probable that the results would not have been different if I had asked the question on a moonlight night with the full moon overhead. The substitution of the memory image for the immediate perception can hardly have impaired the correctness of the judgments. If in any court the size of a distant object were to be given by witnesses, and one man declared it as large as a pea and the second as large as a lemon pie and the third ten feet in diameter it would hardly be fair to form an objective judgment till the psychologist had found out what kind of a mind was producing that estimate. — Professor Hugo Munsterberg in McClure's.

Hats With Tempers.

There are hats with tempers, as every woman is aware. The hats that "go on" beautifully one day (for preference in the hat shop five minutes before they are bought) and which in the next refuse to assume the right pose and poise for love or money. There are few conditions more trying than to fall under the ban of a hat's displeasure. The only thing to be done is to put it away for a week or so and wait till it has recovered from its temper, like a naughty child. One cannot argue with a hat and smacking is not to be recommended. — London Queen.

He Understood.

A late judge whose personal appearance was as unprepossessing as his legal knowledge was profound and his intelligence keen interrupted a female witness:

"Humbugged you, my good woman! What do you mean by that?" said he sternly.

"Well, my lord," replied the woman, "I don't know how to explain it exactly, but if a girl called your lordship a handsome man she would be humbugging you."—London Tit-Bits.

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 4. 07.

Editor Banner—Please allow me to use just a few words in the dear old Banner in reply to Mr Mordecai Robinson's letter. I would have answered last week, but as Secretary of the Young Peoples League Against Liquor for Jefferson county did not get my report off in time, but I am proud to say the contest in Jefferson county on Monday, October the 28th, resulted in a majority of 1797 against liquor. The good people of Jefferson county were in evidence of election day and prior to that time, as these splendid results fully demonstrate. While it was not generally exploited in the campaign, Jefferson county under all conditions in time past, might have been properly classified as a whiskey county, but this large majority is a strong indication of the vast change in sentiment in this county. Congratulations to the victor.

There are but two sides to this question, and that is no saloon or saloon. If you are for the saloon, it means crime, poverty, insanity murders, brutalized manhood, degraded womanhood and suffering children. If you are against, it means prosperous homes, contented wives, joyful mothers, useful manhood, peaceful community, lesser crimes and fewer criminals, and over 35 counties in Alabama voted against the saloon.

I would like to say to my friend Robinson, that on October 28th, Hon. B. B. Comer walked down to the polls at 8:30 and cast his vote against liquor, and not only did the Governor vote against the sale of liquor, but the Lieutenant Governor of Alabama, Henry B. Gray, and if the saloons robs the children out of the money that Mr. Robinson says it does, do you think that the Governor of Alabama would vote against the children? I believe that if the dispensary or the saloons were a good thing some the people in these 35 coun would say so by casting their vote likewise.

We are going to have prohibition in the state of Alabama and I don't see any reason for me writing so much on this question when the people can see it without me telling them

Sincerely yours,
SAM R. BILLINGSLEY.

"As Walk the Many, So Can You"

Patriot

Some men plod along through life with their feet aching and paining them all the time. This of course interferes with their work and makes them grouchy and ill at ease. A man can't enjoy life's pleasures as he should if his feet are worrying him.

There are a great many people who are "Walking on Sunshine." Their feet are feeling good and making their day's work light, for they have no foot worry and can enjoy life; that is, those who they wear

Patriots

"The Shoes That Do Not Hurt"

"Patriot" shoes are made on all the popular leathers over the conforming lasts, made by experts and sewed with silk. They have an inner sole of ground cork that keeps out dampness. "Patriots" cost no more than the hurt kind. Being Goodyear Welts they have no wax, tacks or threads inside to burn and blister the feet.

There is a shape, a fit and a pleasure for every foot. The [illegible] on the heel and the $3,750,000 capital of Roberts, Johnson & Rand Shoe Co. are a guarantee that the "Patriot" is honestly constructed and sure to satisfy.

Over half a hundred Styles

Remember, every "Patriot" is a Foot Doctor. Come and let us show you some "Stars."

The City of Glorious Sunshine.

Of all the living works of man which I have visited I think none is the equal of Moscow in interest and beauty. It is a city of glorious sunshine, of golden domes and silver crosses and of multicolored cupolas, of palaces and temples. In it are found all the refinements of the west and all the curious fascinations of the east. Even the incidents of ordinary commonplace civilized life are touched by a flavor of romance.—Wide World Magazine.

The Castle Comedy

By THOMPSON BUCHANAN

CHAPTER IV.

FOR quite a minute all looked at Sir John Wilmerding in well bred astonishment.

"A stupid game!" He jerked the bandage from his eyes and threw it on the ground. "I won't be a donkey for you all," he added in disgust, which only gave the smiling Mistress Courtleigh opportunity to murmur, "If one could always choose!"

It was May Percy's birthday party, and the game of blind man's buff had come to a sudden end. They were playing out on the big lawn beside the castle. That lawn, a green, clear spot tucked away in a mile of thick studded forest trees, was just large enough for the ancient turreted structure in one corner, with the five acres of roses to the right of it, and the small, green velvet playground beyond. Representatives of all the neighboring families were there—Alice Harmon, Elisabeth Hampton and Dorothy Stanfield, with Sir John, Captain Thorncliffe, Sir Harvey Johnston, the rich baronet "who simpered," and James Bate, the exquisite down from town, who had a most excellent figure to display his clothes.

In the game Sir John caught Mistress Courtleigh, then misnamed her Percy and quickly lost temper at the laugh upon his love so easily displayed.

"Sir John is such an arch flatterer," Mistress Courtleigh had observed slyly as she slipped from his arms, and that precipitated the storm.

Choking with anger, he faced them, while for a moment wonder kept the rest dumb. Sir Henry, who had come out, essayed it, but only Mistress Percy could quell the storm.

"Come, come," she said easily, "if Sir John is tired I don't blame him for stopping. I would not have any gentleman weary himself against his will for my pleasure. We'll find another for the bandage. Gentlemen, volunteers—step forward."

She paused for a reply. The men seemed yet too wonder struck to move.

"Such modesty I have never seen." There was sarcasm in her tone now.

"Let us find one ourselves, then, May," suggested Ethel Courtleigh. The girls looked at each other for a moment, then both nodded.

"M. Dubarre?"

"The very one." Ethel Courtleigh's was the seconding voice. The others were silent—that is, all but Captain Thorncliffe. Had Mistress Courtleigh proposed the devil, the captain would have fought before another should serve. Now he spoke simply:

"Where is Dubarre?"

"Polishing his pumps in the house, most probably, captain." Sir Henry could not better conceal his anger at his daughter's ill timed suggestion.

Mistress Percy reddened ever so slightly. "I'll go fetch him," she answered quickly and took two steps toward the house, then paused. "Eh, come with me." And the two girls went hand in hand along the narrow path that ran beside the edge of the lawn through the roses to the house, hunting for a willing blind man.

The others looked at one another and at Sir John. It was too good an opportunity to let pass. Sir Harvey Johnston opened the play.

"Mistress Percy picked a strange one," he simpered.

James Bate, the exquisite, glanced at his own well turned legs. "A good dancer should catch any girl."

"Perhaps he will beat Sir John," remarked Elizabeth Hampton innocently.

Then Alice Harmon's enthusiasm overflowed. "M. Dubarre is very handsome."

"And bright," added Mistress Dorothy Stanfield, looking at Sir John.

"His low birth is a pity, though," said the first speaker, in tones that implied a doubt of it.

Dorothy Stanfield tossed her head. "Oh, that makes him so interesting. If I were a man I'd fear him for a rival." Rumor had it that Mistress Stanfield kept an anxious eye on the Wilmerding acres.

Sir John still showed his irritation, though he tried bravely to talk to Sir Henry as if undisturbed.

"All Frenchmen are sad flirts, are they not?" inquired Elizabeth Hampton, apparently athirst for information.

Mistress Stanfield answered her. "For shame, Bess! Why, he's only French enough to be fascinating. He talks English like an Englishman. Don't you think so, Sir John?"

Before the lover could reply Sir Henry Percy's spleen put his discretion clean to flight.

"Sir John could scarce be jealous of the antics of a renegade French jig stepper!" he exclaimed fiercely.

And when they all looked up the jig stepper, with the girls beside him, was at hand. The faces of two told that they had heard. The Frenchman's well trained countenance seldom spoke but on orders from within. Now it was blank.

As though accustomed, Dubarre assumed easily the dominating place.

"Schottische?" he questioned. And they entered straightway into the spirit of it.

"No, no!" they cried.

"Valse, then?"

"Never, never."

"Polka?" with shrug.

"Not today."

"Or minuet?" he asked. Then, most persuasively, "The stately minuet?"

They laughed at him.

He threw up his hands in despair. "What, then, can the poor dancing master do? What is it that you want?" The question was to all. The look for May Percy alone.

"Blind man's buff," she said.

"Well, to the victim the bandage." And with his usual nonchalance he placed himself obediently in the hands of Captain Thorncliffe and Mistress Courtleigh, the arch persecutors.

"Is it tight enough?" asked Mistress Courtleigh.

"Close as your image to my heart, fair lady," he answered gallantly.

"So loose as that? Captain Thorncliffe, we must pull harder." The captain did his best.

James Bate's pro-British must out. "Frenchmen work well in the dark."

"They must, to ferret English plots," came the quick answer.

"A nation of runners," simpered Sir Harvey Johnston.

"Trained by chasing the world's armies."

Then they spun Dubarre off into darkness. Now he went groping about, this way and that, all the while complaining aloud of the high English courtesy that made them stand aside for the humble dancing master.

Perhaps it was the chance of the game that brought Sir John Wilmerding beside May Percy.

"That was a pretty scene," he whispered, sneering. She looked at him, surprised.

"Lugging in a French nobody," he explained, angry. "I had to stand by and see"—

"Look out, monsieur is coming this way!"

She cried it to stop the foolish lover, only tactless jealousy would not let him cease.

"Who is he?" was the next demand, when the flurry was past. His tone was now low, eager, angry, but the girl paid little attention. Instead of replying she cried to the blind man:

"Be careful, monsieur, you'll take the bench—you'll be a judge!"

"And should I not, mademoiselle?" he answered, laughing. "Justice is blind. Beware yourself. I'll catch you."

"He suddenly appears at your father's home," exclaimed Sir John, "and, like any other menial, begs a position." He was too angry to be careful now. The girl pulled at his sleeve to make him cease.

"Be quiet. Don't you see monsieur is coming?" she whispered. That was the last straw.

"A toeklcker," cried Wilmerding aloud, and May Percy started forward, away from him.

"Oh, I'm not afraid you'll catch me," she laughed in Dubarre's face; then, dodging weakly, almost fell into his arms. There he held her as men hold their dearest possessions.

"Who is she? Guess who she is!" the rest shouted.

Dubarre straightened. "My—I mean Mlle. Percy," he said, and, releasing her, bowed with the deep reverence of a subject before his queen.

"Good! Good!" cried the others.

Sir John strode for comfort over beside Sir Henry.

The blind man came back to light. He stood in the midst of them all, smiling slightly and holding the bandage in one hand. May Percy was beside him. The others stood about, but these two seemed in some way to be off to themselves, apart from the rest. The girl looked at her captor with a sort of troubled archness. Something it was of the same look she had worn when he made her dance the minuet. At last she spoke, and the tone was troubled, uncertain, questioning.

"I tried, yet I could not escape you. I have got past all our gallants easily. I don't understand."

Then evidently the dancing master forgot himself. He bent toward her, eager, earnest to explain.

"Mademoiselle but slipped a little. My good fortune caught her. Mistress Percy is handicapped always, for no man can stay long away."

The glance that flashed about the circle showed amusement then.

Sir Henry Percy, already black as midnight, grew boorerous in his rage. "Come, come, children," he bellowed, "it's almost time for the feast! Hurry away to prepare yourselves!" And thus rudely he broke up the game.

Gayly they moved toward the castle, the girls gossiping together.

"Isn't he graceful?" exclaimed Alice Harmon. "Did you ever see such quickness, catching May?"

Ethel Courtleigh laughed. "Tut, child! Didn't you see him peeping?"

"For my part," observed Elizabeth Hampton, "I believe she slipped on purpose."

Dubarre still stood where he had caught May Percy. He was looking at the bandage in his hand and smiling with a sort of puzzled, quizzical wonder—as it were, laughing at himself. Sir Henry Percy broke the spell.

"Monsieur," with marked emphasis on the title, "seems strangely at home at the game of blind man's buff."

Sir John followed the lead.

"Certainly he displays rare execution. One might imagine he had played diligently at it from childhood, with his French army perhaps."

Dubarre looked up. "No, no, monsieur," he laughed, "not there. The emperor reverses the game. His enemies are blindfold."

Sir Henry Percy and Sir John walked away with much dignity, but without giving a reply. Dubarre resumed his tossing.

Now a big oak, the captain of the encircling host of trees, stood out in the center foreground of the lawn. There was a bench on the darkside of the tree, and the path through the garden to the castle ran past it on the right, and on the left continued to the woodland lodge, where the dancing master lived, a quarter of a mile away.

The birthday feast was to be set on the lawn near this "captain" tree, and there, leaning against the bench, Pierre had left his heart. Mistress Percy, starting toward the house after the others, stopped in the garden to get a flower for her hair, then returned to the lawn to superintend the placing of the tables for the birthday feast. Coming along the path, she stepped from behind the big tree almost to overrun Dubarre. Both started.

"You here?" she exclaimed.

The man drew back. "I am in mademoiselle's way?"

"No, oh, no," she protested.

"Mademoiselle is disturbed; unwell perhaps." There was insistence in his speech.

"You know I'm not."

Still he seemed bent on forcing it. "What, then, mademoiselle?"

Quickly she faced him, all sternness. "'Tis you, sir."

For the first time since they had met the girl had the upper hand.

"I?" he cried aghast.

"Yes, you've been remiss." The words were a rebuke; the tone, utter condemnation. They swept him to inglorious defeat.

"I remiss to you? Oh, mademoiselle!" He dropped on one knee, pain in every look and word and gesture.

"Yes, you've not given me my dancing lesson." And the smile that broke over her face as she said it showed the first awakening of one who begins to know.

Dubarre sprang to his feet all ablaze with happiness.

"Ah, mademoiselle, like le bon Dieu,

As though accustomed, Dubarre assumed easily the dominating place.

you give pain that great joy may follow."

"Monsieur!" That was all, but the smile, still there, spoke volumes.

"It was your birthday. I thought the lesson forgot." He cried it eagerly as a defense.

"Monsieur!" Reproachfully this time she said it.

"But how I shall atone!"

"The minuet."

"With Pierre and his harp," the man broke in delightedly. He ran to the path and called over toward the lodge. "Pierre! Pierre!" then came back to the girl beside the tree.

"Have you taught many ladies of France the minuet, monsieur?" she asked as they waited for Pierre.

"I fear that none can now be taught, mademoiselle."

She drew up coldly. "Which means, of course, they all know. We English girls are perhaps more backward. We learn more of housewifery, less of junketings and furbelows."

After that there was silence until Pierre appeared.

"A minuet, Pierre." The dancing master spoke in his most professional tone. The music began, and they took positions.

As their hands met in the dance: "And does the house— Oh, what do you call it?" asked Dubarre.

"Housewifery?" prompted the girl.

"Yes, that's it. Does that give the grand air, mademoiselle?" he questioned, most innocently.

"Does flattery come within your province, M. Dubarre?" she answered. "'Twas brave of you."

"Even a poor dancing master can be brave for the truth, mademoiselle."

There was no reply for that.

"You said your countrywomen do not care for the minuet. Why is it?" she asked after a pause.

His face lighted. "Because their hearts pump warm blood, mademoiselle, not freezing water that boils only from anger. For such, the minuet, but for women of heart, the dance."

"The dance?" She stepped and looked the question. "One we English would like? What is the dance?"

Well, I will put a little piece in your valuable paper. We are having very dry weather, but it is fine on cotton pickers and corn gatherers.

Mr. Tom Gandy is visiting relatives this week.

Miss Lillie Moore was the guest of Miss Kate Latham.

Mrs. Ella Chastain was the guest of Miss Cassie Lawrence last Sunday.

Mr. Buford Lawrence was the guest of Mr. A. C. Maness, Sunday.

We are glad to see the farmers hauling their cotton to town; hope they will get a good price for it.

We are glad to say that Mr. G. F. Latham is getting a good trade.

Our Sunday school is progressing very nicely, more out than common.

Mr. J. O. Mize has moved into his dwelling house.

Our day school will start at the Shoults school house, Monday; get ready, children, they are working very fast on the new school house.

Talk about a law that you can't hunt anything on anybody's land. If somebody don't look out they are going to get into trouble. You may think you can go 'possum hunting and nobody know it, but you can't do it. There are secret men out watching for such tricks. The law has been published; you had better take heed. One man had to pay $25 at the church to keep out of trouble. Well, I have written what a dead man couldn't think of.

You can't be healthy if you have a weak, unhealthy, tired out stomach. Neither can you feel good if by some little irregularity in eating you have caused the stomach to get out of order. These little stomach troubles are signs of indigestion, which may and very often does turn into a very bad case of dyspepsia. Don't allow this to go on a single day without doing something to overcome it. Take some good reasonable and safe digestant like KODOL for dyspepsia. KODOL is the best remedy known today for heartburn, belching and all troubles arising from a disordered digestion. It is pleasant to take and affords relief promptly. Sold by Upchurch Drug co.

...t of the Lesson, Josh. xxiv, 14-28. ...ory Verses, 22-24—Golden Text, ...h. xxiv, 15—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1907, by American Press Association.]

The Lord had given rest unto Israel from all their enemies (xxiii, 1); the battle had been set up at Shiloh (xviii, 1); and still there when Samuel was called as a little lad to minister to the Lord in the days of Eli (xviii, 1; 1 Sam. i, 3, 24); Joshua was old and felt that his sojourn on earth must soon be over, so he called together the elders and officers of Israel and rehearsed to them all that the Lord their God had done for them and how He had fought for them as He had promised, bringing the record down from the days of Abraham to the time when he was speaking. He reminded them that it was "the Lord their God" who had done it all, using the particular phrase about fourteen times in chapter xxiii, and in chapter xxiv, 13, the Lord Himself, through Joshua, spoke of more than twenty things he had done for them. Joshua appealed to the faithfulness of God in his words: "Not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God spake concerning you. All are come to pass unto you, and not one thing hath failed thereof" (xxiii, 14). Solomon at the dedication of the temple used almost identical words (1 Kings viii, 56), and it is our privilege to this day and always to trust in the faithfulness of God, resting upon such assurances as 1 Cor. x, 13; 1 Thess. iii, 3. Now, in our lesson we have the burden of Joshua's heart for this people whom he was about to leave, "Fear the Lord and serve Him in sincerity and truth" (verse 14) and three times the people declare that they will serve the Lord (verses 18, 21, 24), emphasizing it in verse 24 in these words: "The Lord our God will we serve, and His voice will we obey." Joshua's declared determination, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord" (verse 15) and his very strong plea had a good result, for we read that "Israel served the Lord all the days of Joshua and all the days of the elders that outlived Joshua, which had known all the works of the Lord that He had done for Israel (verse 31). The people considered the Lord's mercies to them, saying, "The Lord our God brought us up out of the land of Egypt and did those great signs and preserved us in all the way and drave out from before us all the people; therefore will we also serve the Lord, for He is our God" (verses 17, 18).

Joshua warned them that the Lord was holy and jealous (verse 19), that He will not tolerate other gods, but the people insisted that they would serve Him. Note the other six places where he is called jealous—in Ex. xx, 5; xxxiv, 14; Deut. iv, 24; v, 9; vi, 15; Josh. xxiv, 19; Nah. i, 2—indicating that He will jealously care for and defend His own, but He covets His own all for themselves that He may do His utmost for them. In verse 22 we learn that to serve the Lord means a very decided stand against ourselves, a denial and renunciation of self (Matt. xvi, 24; Phil. iii, 3), knowing that in us—that is, in our flesh—there dwelleth no good thing (Rom. vii, 18). As was the custom, a stone was set up for a witness, as if it had heard all the words (verses 26, 27). See also xxii, 26, 27; Gen. xxviii, 18, 22; xxxi, 45-49. May it not suggest to us that "the stone of Israel" (Gen. xlix, 24), "the tried stone, the sure foundation, the precious cornerstone" (Isa. xxviii, 16) is a witness always to every word and act and thought of ours? May we lay it to heart that our God is a jealous God and that we cannot serve God and Mammon (Luke xvi, 13).

Israel was redeemed from the bondage of Egypt that they might serve the Lord who redeemed them (Ex. iii, 23; x, 26), and to do this they should all that they possessed. Not one beef was to be left behind. Samuel's great plea was, "Only fear the Lord and serve Him in truth with all your heart, for consider how great things He hath done for you" (I Sam. xii, 20). One of our Lord's replies to the devil was, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve" (Matt. iv, 10). The height of future bliss for many is described in the words, "The throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it, and His servants shall serve Him, and they shall see His face, and His name shall be in their foreheads" (Rev. xxii, 3, 4). Paul, who testified of his relation to the Lord Jesus in these words, "Whose I am and whom I serve," and was delighted to call himself a bond servant of Jesus Christ, wrote to the Thessalonians, "Ye turned to God from idols to serve the living God and to wait for His Son from heaven" (Acts xxvii, 23; 1 Thess. i, 9, 10). Of himself he said elsewhere, "Serving the Lord with all humility of mind and with many tears and temptations which befell me by the lying in wait of the Jews" (Acts xx, 19). If the Queen of Sheba was constrained to say of Solomon's servants, "Happy are these thy servants which stand continually before thee and hear thy wisdom" (II Chron. ix, 7), how much more happy and how much higher the privileges of the servants of the living God. Those who hear the name of Jesus Christ and yet turn to the things of this present evil world have not heard and observed Him.

UNEASY INDIA.

The Specter of Revolt in the "Pivot of the British Empire."

India is in the throes of revolution. The press dispatches that have found their way into American newspapers fail to give a comprehensive idea of the real situation in Hindustan. Lord Curzon on the eve of his assumption of the vice royalty declared India to be "the pivot of the British empire." "If this empire," he emphatically declared, "lost any other parts of its dominions we could survive, but if we lost India the sun of the empire would set." Today this "pivot of the British empire" is wabbling. Britain is apprehensive lest this "sun of the empire" is losing its potency.

Already bloody demonstrations have taken place in different parts of India. The Punjab, at one end of the country, is rent with riots. The two Bengals, at the other extremity, are proclaimed hotbeds of sedition. The presidencies of Bombay and Madras are disaffected.

The unrest in Calcutta, the uprisings in Rawalpindi, the riots in Lahore and the agitation in Bombay and Madras, separated from one another by hundreds of miles, indicate that community of interest is binding the races, nationalities and castes of Hindustan together, inspiring them to act in concert. A subtle chord of sympathy appears to run through the length and breadth of the land.

This is a new development for India. The country, notorious for its antagonisms of caste, creed, color, custom, climate and language, now seems to pulsate at its vital centers with the same heart throbs.

The native press and leaders in India are pulling together and presenting a bold front. Hindoos, Mohammedans, Sikhs, Brahmins or Pariahs, they have the regeneration of India at heart—autonomy for India is their aim, their endeavor—and they are resolutely working singly and jointly in the face of "prosecution, persecution and conviction."

India's awakening has not been sudden nor spasmodic. Gradually English education has been instilling into the minds of the people love of liberty. Imperceptibly English education has been fusing together the different castes and races of India, making them more tolerant toward one another.—Saint Nihal Sing of Rawalpindi, Punjab, India, in Harper's Weekly.

The Riddle of Life.

Over in France Professor de Lage of the Sorbonne claims to have effected the chemical development of life in the unfertilized eggs of the sea urchin.

"In about an hour," says the report, "segmentation, which is the first sign of life, began, and the eggs produced larvae."

But did Professor de Lage create life? Did he produce life that did not already exist? The egg was apparently ready for its functions. It would seem to the lay mind, therefore, that it was a live egg. Might not a scientist say quite as wisely, "I have planted an acorn and have produced a tree."

When man can take two or more elements of his own composition, unite them and produce life, then and then only will he be able to claim the function that is creative.

Some time ago Professor Jacques Loeb of the University of California proved that it was possible to give to the eggs of sea urchins the environment necessary to life. But Professor Loeb did not solve the riddle of life any more than Professor de Lage, and the secrets of life's beginning remain quite as dark as the secrets of death.—New York American.

Battle Names For Humans.

Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis is said to have been named in commemoration of the battle in which his father was wounded. As that engagement occurred in 1864 and Judge Landis was born in 1866, his peculiar name cannot have been bestowed on the spur of the moment. A similar instance of peculiar paternal choice in naming a child is exhibited in the case of Captain Malvern Hill Barnum of the regular army. His father must have had some reason akin to that of the elder Landis, for, while the battle was fought in 1862, Captain Barnum was not born until fourteen months afterward. Possibly there are military associations which civilians cannot understand that make certain events of peculiar significance in the lives of veterans. This supposition is strengthened by the fact that a few years ago there lived in Boston two negroes, brothers, sons of a veteran who bore respectively the given names of Army of the Potomac and Sixth Corps.—Kansas City Journal.

An Ancient Tower.

The ancient tower of Fulham Parish church, which has occasioned better founded anxiety than St. Paul's cathedral, is a conspicuous landmark familiar to all river loving Londoners. It contains a peal of ten bells, which are renowned for sweetness of tone. Within the tower are many monuments of great interest. Sir William Butts, the royal physician introduced by Shakespeare in "Henry VIII.," had an altar tomb with his figure in brass, but these have perished, though the slab remains, with the graceful Latin epitaph by his protege, Sir John Cheke. Not far away is a life sized statue of John Viscount Mordaunt, the distinguished cavalier and constable of Windsor castle. There has been a church at Fulham, of which the bishops of London were once sinecure rectors, for more than a thousand years, but the present tower, which is to be repaired, probably dates from the fourteenth century.—Dundee Advertiser.

ALEXANDER POPE.

He Was Considered in His Day the Greatest of All Poets.

Few men of our day comprehend the commanding intellectual position held by Pope during the latter period of his life and for a long period after his death. There has never been anything approaching it in the history of our own literature or of any literature. In the opinion of vast numbers he was not merely the greatest English poet of his time, but the greatest English poet of all time; not merely the greatest of English poets, but the greatest of all poets that ever existed. Even those who took the lowest estimate of his character—and of such there was no small number—entertained the highest admiration for his genius. They expressed themselves with an extravagance of praise which astounds the modern reader, too apt to go to the other extreme of unwarranted depreciation. They did not content themselves with according him mere greatness; to him belonged perfect greatness. It was assumed by his friends as a matter of course: it was conceded by the indifferent and even by those personally hostile. As one illustration out of many, a poem appeared in 1733, entitled "An Epistle to the Little Satyrist of Twickenham." It was full of the severest reflections upon Pope's character. It spoke of him as an object of universal scorn. It charged him with being under the influence of ill nature, spleen, envy, malice and avarice. Yet it admitted that not only in early youth did he surpass others, but that his powers had increased with advancing years,

Till to perfection you at last arriv'd
Which none have e'er excell'd that ever liv'd.

This was no sentiment of a solitary individual. It was a widespread feeling at the time, and it did not die out suddenly. If anything, the belief increased in strength after Pope's death. We can get some idea of its force by the few verses summing up his character, which were immediately produced by the man against whom for a quarter of a century the poet had been directing the shafts of his satire. The year before Pope died Colley Cibber had been substituted in place of Theobald as the hero of "The Dunciad." He had every reason to feel and express the bitterest resentment against the author of the satire, so far as a nature almost absolutely free from rancor could entertain such a sentiment.—T. R. Lounsbury in Scribner's.

The Stag Hound's Scent.

Hounds with very fine noses are not and perhaps never have been too common. The hound that never loses the line, but threads his way through coverts, along roads and turns with the stag when the latter runs beside a hedge, is invaluable, and such hounds help greatly to the death of the stag. There is another quality which is invaluable and rare—the faculty of discriminating not only the scent of the quarry from that of all others, but of distinguishing the scent of the hunted animal from that of others of the same kind. When we consider how foxhounds in a well preserved country are allowed and perhaps sometimes even encouraged to change fores it is remarkable that they should have retained any of this quality of their staghound ancestors. But the fact remains that of the drafts which make up our staghound kennels some few hounds in each do develop the faculty of holding to the line in spite of the many temptations to change, thus reverting to the qualities of their ancestors.—T. F. Dale in Blackwood's Magazine.

The Longest English Novel.

"Clarissa Harlowe," written by Samuel Richardson (1689-1761), and generally regarded as his masterpiece, is the longest novel in the English language. It ran to eight volumes, and in publishing it Richardson said: "Ashamed, as I am, of the prolixity, I thought I owed the public eight volumes in quantity for the price of seven." He knew very well that it was not a page too long for the public for which he wrote, and the result justified his faith in himself as an author and in the public appetite, which, created by himself in the first instance by his "Pamela" (another novel of great length), grew by what it fed upon. His third work, "Sir Charles Grandison," extended to seven volumes. "We do not," says Professor Masson, "read Richardson's novels now. These are the novels of eight to ten volumes, written in the tedious form of letters and recording conversations and meditations in which the story creeps on inch by inch without so much as an unexpected pistol shot or a trick of harlequin or pantaloon to relieve the attention."

How Words Change.

Words undergo all sorts of changes, not so much in form as in meaning. Their forms remain traceable, but the way in which many of them shift their meanings is very interesting and remarkable. Take our common word "resentment." It now means manifestation of anger or displeasure. In its origin it meant almost precisely the opposite. It signified civil attention or recognition of a friendly act. To equivocate was at first merely to call two things by the same name, not to utter a falsehood. Hypocrite meant originally nothing but a player or actor and had no distinct meaning. Tinsel at first was made of the precious metals, and the word was in good repute till detection of repeated frauds caused its degradation. The word "admiration" once meant wonder merely. Now it also means approval and delight. There are thousands of words in English that thus have changed their signification, some for the better, some for the worse. But their forms have changed little, in many cases not at all.—Portland Oregonian.

DUELING IN THE NAVY

The Tragic Affair That Put an End to the Practice.

A MIDSHIPMAN'S CHALLENGE.

It Was Accepted by the Lawyer, and the Battle Was Fought in Delaware. Sad Fate of the Two Principals in the Unfortunate Meeting.

That settlement of quarrels by appeal to the code of honor was no longer to be the unwritten law of the American navy was determined by a duel in which William Miller, Jr., a Philadelphia lawyer, was slain in a personal affair fought along the northern circle of Delaware. The man who fired the fatal shot was Midshipman Charles G. Hunter, and the encounter took place along Naaman's creek on the afternoon of Sunday, March 21, 1830.

Singularly enough, neither Miller, who lost his life, nor Hunter, who killed him, was principal in the original quarrel that led to the meeting on the bank of the little creek in Delaware. Neither had seen the other until a few hours before the challenge was sent and accepted.

Simply a mishot in a game of billiards played at Third and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia, led to the tragedy that plunged two homes into sorrow and imbittered the life of the man whose pistol shot causelessly shed human blood.

Henry Wharton Griffith and R. Dillon Drake, prominent society men of Philadelphia, played the game of billiards, and Griffith made the mishot which called forth a taunt from Drake, who was immediately struck in the face with a cue by Griffith. A challenge to a duel was sent by Drake, but Griffith declared that the challenger was beneath his notice and that he would not demean himself socially by consenting to meet him.

Then followed a long and wordy warfare in which each posted the other as a coward. Lieutenant Duryee of the United States navy was called to make an effort to settle the dispute, and it was then that Miller, the lawyer, and Hunter, the midshipman, became involved in the quarrel. In the heated discussion Hunter accused Miller of publishing a confidential letter, and a challenge was at once sent by the midshipman and accepted by the attorney.

It was decided that the duel should be fought early on Sunday morning of March 21, but it was nearly 10 o'clock before carriages containing the principals, seconds and surgeons left a house that stood on Chestnut street above Sixth. The presence of the company excited some suspicion at Chester, where the party stopped for lunch, but they hurried down the post road, tied their horses close to the highway and proceeded 200 yards behind a clump of trees that would shield them from observation.

As the sun was setting two pistol shots rang out simultaneously as one of the seconds counted "One, two, three—fire!" Hunter stood unharmed as the ball from his opponent's pistol struck at his feet, but Miller cried out that he was shot, placed one hand on his breast and fell with a bullet lying close to his heart. In a few minutes he died, while pale and anxious faces watched the convulsive breathing of the dying man.

"Gentlemen," said Hunter, "I had no enmity against this man. I never heard of him until two days ago. Let those whose quarrel embroiled him be responsible for his death."

After a hurried consultation it was decided that the midshipman should leave the state at once, and he was driven rapidly to New Castle, Del., where he boarded a boat for New York and rejoined the navy. In order to hide the tragedy it was decided to wait until dark and take Miller to Philadelphia in a carriage.

Seating the dead man between them, two seconds held him in an upright position on the long journey to Philadelphia. News of the duel had reached Chester, and a crowd of men stood at Third street bridge to intercept the carriages. The first buggy contained the surgeon, and, as his explanation was satisfactory, he was permitted to proceed. The dead man in the second carriage was driven through the crowd without the ruse being detected, and at midnight the body was placed in a house in Walnut street, where vigil was kept by the seconds, who drank heavily to support them in the terrible strain under which they had been placed.

Miller's father said that he held no malice against Hunter, but the midshipman, who was suspended for a year for punishment, was haunted by the specter of the dead man lying on the bank of Naaman's creek, slain by his hand, and died a prematurely old man after a lonely life, shut off from all hope of preferment in the navy. He was buried by the newspaper men of New York, who erected a tombstone over his grave.—Philadelphia Ledger.

HOW WE ARE FORMED.

A Few of the Many Marvels of the Human Body.

On an average man's body there are 500,000 hairs. Plucking one every second it would take him twelve eight-hour working days to pull them all out. In his blood there are 25,000,000,000,000 red corpuscles. Laid end side by side they would cover a surface of 3,150 square yards.

The whole of the blood passes through a man's heart nearly twice in every minute. It weighs one-thirteenth of the entire body weight, and it moves in different parts of the body at speeds varying from ten feet to 1,000 yards (nearly one mile) an hour.

The fat of your body is fluid. It becomes solid only when the body cools after death. It is one of your most useful constituents, forming a nonconducting sheath to protect you from cold, acting as pads to preserve from shock, on the tips of the fingers, the toes and the heels and lying always ready as a reserve food supply when you can get nothing to eat.

A little artery passes from your brain through the skull into the scalp, which acts as a safety valve when the brain is congested with blood.

The skin cannot grow again once it is destroyed; hence the unsightly scars left by burns and severe wounds. Only the surface layer can renew itself. When the whole thickness is destroyed, it never reforms. This is the more curious as muscles, nerves, blood vessels and bones, all less liable to injury than the skin, can grow again.

You are really a water rather than a land animal. Although as a whole you live on dry land, your body consists of countless millions of separate living particles, and these are all immersed in the water which constitutes four-fifths of your substance.

Within the inner part of your ear, deep in the bone, is a quantity of fluid which acts as a spirit level and enables you to keep your balance.—Chicago Record-Herald.

A WISE BRITON.

He Half Suspected at the Start That the Feathers Weren't Edible.

A Brooklyn man who entertained an English relative tells this without the quiver of an eyelid:

"My cousin from London reached New York last summer, along with a hot wave. The crowds were deep before the soda water fountains on lower Broadway. He remarked that he did not comprehend how Americans could swallow that 'nasty slush.'

"'A mere preference,' I explained. 'We have many curious examples of that kind in this country. One of the most remarkable evidences of insatiable appetite for froth rather than substance is that of the American poultry lover who daily advertises in our New York papers for 1,000 feather beds. As you may well imagine, he is said to have entirely lost his taste for the flesh of the fowl.'

"'Oh, really?' exclaimed the Englishman in quiet surprise. Nothing more was said till nine months later, when I opened my mail one day and found a marked copy of the London Times, which he had sent to me. He called my attention to this extract in an article on mob rule and lynching in America. 'It can hardly be possible that the supply of tar and feathers in the United States will be sufficient at the rate the mobs are covering the bodies of the poor wretches who are tortured and humiliated before they are drawn and quartered or burned at the stake.'

"'I fancy you will see your error after reading this,' he wrote. 'It is quite plain the man wanted the beds for another purpose and not, as you believe, to eat.'"—Brooklyn Eagle.

Mentally.

"You have been abroad, haven't you, Mr. Snipleigh?"

"No, Miss Sharp. What made you think I had been abroad?"

"Why, I heard papa say you were 'way off.'"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Candor.

Mabel (aged six)—Ain't you afraid of our big dog? The Parson (very thin)—No, my dear. He would not make much of a meal off me. Mabel—Oh, but he likes bones best.—Chicago News.

Every brave heart must consider society as a child and not allow it to dictate.—Emerson.

How to Cure a Cold.

Be as careful as you can you will occasionally take cold, and when you do, get a medicine of known reliability, one that has an established reputation and that is certain to effect a quick cure. Such a medicine is Chamberlin's Cough Remedy. It has gained a world wide reputation by its remarkable cures of this most common ailment, and can always be depended upon. It acts on nature's plan, relieves the lungs, aids expectoration, opens the secretions and aids nature in restoring the system to a healthy condition. During the many years in which it has been in general use we have yet to learn of a single case of cold or attack of the grip having resulted in pneumonia when this remedy was used, which shows conclusively that it is a certain preventive of that dangerous disease. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. For sale by Upchurch Drug co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thorsby.

ALWAYS WAS SICK.

When a man says he always was sick—troubled with a cough that lasted all winter—what would you think if he should say—he never was sick since using Ballard's Horehound Syrup. Such a man exists.

Mr. J. C. Clark, Denver, Colorado, writes: "For years I was troubled with a severe cough that would last all winter. This cough left me in a miserable condition. I tried Ballard's Horehound Syrup and have not had a sick day since. That's what it did for me." Sold by Upchurch Drug co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thorsby.

A LESSON IN LAW.

Several Things the Philadelphia Drummer Didn't Know.

"Most of us think we know the law pretty well," said the Philadelphia drummer, "but I had a little experience to show me that there are several things in the statute books that I don't know. I was in a New England town and dropped into a barber shop to get shaved. There was only one barber, and he didn't look as if he knew putty. He turned out to be a pretty good shaver, however, and as I had had a drink just before entering the shop I fell asleep in the chair. I slept for half an hour, and when I awoke he was through with me. The first thing I missed on getting out of the chair was my roll of money, next my watch, next my overcoat, next and lastly my scarfpin. I went for that barber for all I was worth, but he denied robbing me, and his face wore a smile. Then I got a gait on me and went to a lawyer's office.

"'Can you prove by a credible witness that you had $90 in cash when you entered the barber shop?' he asked.

"I couldn't.

"'Can you prove that your watch was taken in the shop instead of being lost on the street?'

"I couldn't.

"'Are you sure that you had your pin on as you opened the door to enter?'

"I wasn't.

"'As to your overcoat,' continued the lawyer, 'have you a bill of sale of it, or was any one with you when you bought it? In other words, can you swear to the ownership in law of any particular overcoat?'

"I couldn't.

"'Then I can do nothing for you,' he said, and I went to a second lawyer to be told the same thing. I had left the shop without paying for my shave, and I was even told that the barber could arrest me for beating him out of 15 cents and have me fined $5. I believe I can quote Shakespeare correctly and distinguish between tea and sugar, but when it comes down to the law I am not in it. It's too kinky."—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

Samuel Warren's Vanity.

The vanity of Samuel Warren, the author of "Ten Thousand a Year," in his early years of authorship at least, was remarkable, and there is a story told of him to the effect that on one occasion at a friend's house he had to take down to dinner a lady whom he had not met before, and as soon as they were seated at table asked her if she had ever heard of Samuel Warren. "Oh, certainly," was the reply. "My husband prefers Warren's blacking to any other. We always use it."—Westminster Gazette.

Choice of Evils.

"Well, old man," said Sinnickson after the performance, "I certainly was surprised to see you in private theatricals."

"Yes," replied Brightly, "but you see if I didn't appear on the stage I'd probably have to sit in the audience and be bored to death."—Philadelphia Press.

Florence Drug Store, Local Agent, Receives Many Inquiries Regarding Mr. Cooper and His Medicine.

Since his announcement last week that he had secured the local agency for the famous Cooper Remedies, Florence Drug Store have been besieged with inquiries regarding the celebrated Mr. Cooper and the work he is now doing in Chicago. In response to the expressed desire of many persons for more news regarding this remarkable young man and his medicine, the following is taken from a recent issue of the Chicago Journal:

Still more cases are heard from, and the continued stream of humanity poured into the Public Drug Co., 150 State street, yesterday in search for the remarkable new discovery of medicine. The demand for these remedies seems to grow larger each day. Thousands of Chicagoans who have suffered for years with chronic stomach trouble, catarrh and rheumatism are being made happy every day by the use of this peculiar remedy sold by Mr. Cooper.

An hour or so spent at the Cooper headquarters would convince the most skeptical person that this new treatment is something entirely different from anything ever sold. As usual, Mr. Cooper was busy all day receiving kind words and thanks from the hundreds who had been entirely cured by this simple preparation.

Mr. John Schwirtzen, living at 363 Fifth avenue, had the following to say:

"I have had rheumatism for several years, sick at the stomach, felt tired and dull most of the time. I have tried everything I have ever heard of in the way of medicine and found practically no relief. I was advised to try Cooper's New Medicine. I did so, and the result is I am relieved of stomach does not bother and I have a good eat anything I want better than I have for want to say right here, greatest medicine I ever You may use my name, others who are troubled way to be relieved as I

Another caller was Stewart, 109 West Madison who said:

"I have had stomach years, and any one who in this way knows what distressed feeling it causes a time I have felt that I most any price to be cured by accident that I heard of Cooper's remedies. I made up my mind to buy ment of him. I have been about two weeks and it is ble to tell how much good done me. I feel altogether ent; I have more life and than I have had for years medicine certainly does and strengthen the whole The tired feeling and sick of the stomach has entirely away. I feel well again."

Mr. Cooper said, in the matter, "It usually takes three to five weeks for one feel the effects of medicine cases. I will have hundreds the remainder of my stay in city call and thank me for the medicine has done for them of catarrh, stomach trouble matism and nervousness. I ways glad to shake hands persons who have been good health. If there is that we should appreciate life, it is good health."

THE STRAWBERRY.

It Was First Cultivated by a Blind King of Hungary.

Where Eperies, the picturesque Hungarian town, is now surrounded by beautiful gardens and fruited fields there was at the time of King Bela II. nothing but thick wilderness. Once this blind and unhappy sovereign was traveling in his realm. It was a hot, sultry summer day, and while searching for a shady spot in which to rest he became lost. Deadly tired in consequence of his long wandering, he asked his attendants for a drink of water. They seated him on the soft, green grass in the cool shade of big old trees, and then the cavaliers separated to hunt for a refreshing spring.

Meanwhile the king wanted to find out more about his resting place and began to grope about him with his hands. Thus he discovered strawberries growing all about him, says the New York Herald. He ate them; so, partly quenching his thirst, he waited quietly for his gentlemen. After a short time they returned, some with empty cups, some with pearly spring water.

The king then said to his attendants: "Have the trees cut down around this place where my hands found the refreshing strawberries. Here shall rise a town whose name shall be Eperies (strawberry) in remembrance of this day for all time."

As the king commanded so it was. The wilderness was cleared, and in its place is a town whose arms carry the strawberry even today.

A Wrong Steer.

A mathematical professor had been invited by a city friend to visit him at his residence in a certain square and had promised to do so. Meeting him some time afterward, the friend inquired of the professor why he did not come to see him.

"I did come," said the mathematician, "but there was some mistake. You told me that you lived in a square, and I found myself in a parallelogram, so I went away again."

The Point of View.

"You can't get in here on a half ticket," exclaimed the doorkeeper at the circus.

"I thought I could," apologized the small town citizen. "I have a bad eye, and I only expected to see half of the show."

"Then you'll have to get two tickets," said the doorkeeper. "If you only have one good eye it'll take you twice as long to see the show."—Harper's Weekly.

CALLING IN PARIS.

The Concierge Is a Peculiar Institution in Several Ways.

You leave your card at the the person to whom you desire sent yourself, and there it is charge by that peculiarly Parisian tionary, the concierge, says Barrett Wendell in Scribner least in Paris, the greater French people live in large buildings taining a number of apartments a common entrance and Close to the entrance door, on the of the street, are some small rooms inhabited by the concierge porter, with his family. The among other things, is to keep watch on whoever goes in or at least one of them, often the wife or half grown daughter, at hand.

The chief peculiarity of their ament seems to be insatiable curiosity. At whatever hour of day or night you call on a concierge you are sure to find somebody eating or just from table, and the atmosphere lited by this bustling personage is immortally laden with the fumes something recently boiled.

No matter whether you call on friend who lives in some superior out of the way place or on one who inhabits something like a palace, concierge is always about the You can detect little difference tween those in charge of humbler doors and of insignificant. They as like as house flies. Of course there are private houses in Paris, with regular domestic servants such as would find anywhere, but these, rich or simple, are so unusual that you remember the concierge as everywhere standing between you and further human intercourse.

In response to your card, which concierge duly sees delivered, or card, often with a note, in return, as is generally the case, this acknowledgment of your existence carries intimation of when your Parisian quaintance may be found at home, ther habitual or for your special benefit, you make your second visit at appointed time and thus enter into personal relations.

Otherwise, your intercourse has limited itself to a polite exchange of Generally speaking, you never see or attempt to see French people except when they have asked you one of their regular days of receiving or have made a definite appointment. To call on a person at any other time, to do more than leave your card with the concierge—would be an unwarranted pretense to intimacy.

Many people seem to think that unless they can open a Savings Account with not less than $50.00 or $100.00, it is not worth the while to begin. This is not a correct position to take. If a person cannot open an account with more than $1.00, and really desires to get some money ahead, then he should begin with even $1.00. The first dollar saved and put in bank, is the initial step on the way to prosperity. "Great oaks from little acorns grow." Dear Editor—Will you allow me space in your valuable paper to return thanks to the good people and kind neighbors and friends that assisted us in our bereavement? I sure do feel grateful to all of them. It doesn't seem that I could say too much or do too much for them, especially Bros. Woods and Adams. It seemed their prayers reached the high heavens and the doors and windows were opened and their voices heard and their prayers answered. It seemed to give life and light to that poor dying child and went just like a light blew out and said the angels were with him, he was not alone, and Jesus would pass them through the gates. Many thanks to all.

MRS. SMITH.

New Prospect.

The Sunday school at this place is progressing nicely by the leadership of Mr. S. C. Powell, our faithful superintendent. He discharges his duty faithfully and exerts every effort possible for the advancement of the school, and is worthy of the honor conferred upon him as our leader. We also have some excellent teachers that are doing everything in their power to impress God's truths upon the minds of the pupils. And we must say too, that the pupils are exerting their efforts to grasp the truths of God, and to become useful in His service.

We have also a young peoples' society, viz: The Soldiers of the King, that is also progressing nicely under the directions of Miss Ida Belle Davis. It seems that the young people are realizing the great importance of working for the Master, and are taking hold on His work with zeal and energy, and we believe will accomplish a great deal for their King. Their motto is, Victory is ours though Christ our King. The young Christians all take some part in the work. It gladens our hearts to see young people take so great an interest in the Master's work, realizing that the Master is still calling for laborers in His harvest.

We forgot to say that the Sunday school has adopted this newly organized class work which is grand in any Sunday school.

The church also aims to organize the Laymen's Movement which will be a great feature in the work.

Thank you for your kindness in printing this. A WORKER.

Popwell School House.

Editor Banner—Please announce in the Banner that there will be a debate at this place Saturday night, November 16. The subject for discussion is, "Resolved that the Farmer is not the intellectual class of people." Speakers on the affirmative, Harry Williams and Rufus Popwell; Negative, Howard Roper and Curry Culp. Everybody is invited. We expect to have a nice crowd and good behavior so as to make it a success as well as a training to the boys.

A STUDENT.

An Omission.

In our report of the death of Mr. J. Lonnie Smith last week we omitted to state that, at the request of the deceased, Rev. S. M. Adams preached an affecting sermon at the house, Rev. F. M. Woods officisting at the grave.

Billingsley, Nov. 11, 1907

Dear Editor:—You can state in your paper that Babe Oats was captured at Lawley, Friday, by the Sheriff of Autauga Co., and lodged in jail at Prattville. J. C. Gaines.

Pinedale.

Editor Banner—Please allow me a small space in your paper to say a few words, as this is the first.

I am glad to say that the health of this community is good.

Mr. A. T. Headley and Miss Julia E. Connell were married last Wednesday night, Rev. Fate Ellison performing the ceremony. We had a nice time with a small crowd.

Mr. Wash Heflin and Misses Hixie Gore and Nola Fearing took a walk to Union Point last Sunday and report a nice time, and also spent a while with Miss Minnie Miner.

We will write again if this escapes the waste basket. Two FRIENDS.

Mount Nebo.

Editor Banner—Will you please allow me to announce through the columns of the Banner, that the singing convention which has heretofore been announced to be held at Mount Nebo church the second Sunday in November, 1907, according to the desires of the official members, has been called in; owing to the fact that the community has been burdened very heavily with sickness, and is therefore unprepared. Hope that Mr. James Franklin will take notice of this and arrange for the convention at some other place, and probably the members will call for the convention at a more convenient season, or will instruct outside parties to do so.

Respectfully,
MEMBERS.

We have several interesting things in store for the holidays. Watch the papers. Florence Drug Store.

FARMERS' UNION

The Clanton County Farmers' Union will meet with Unity No. 740, 2½ miles west of Clanton on Thursday and Friday, Dec. 5-6, 1907, for the purpose of electing officers and transact any other such business that may come before the body. Any person wishing to come by rail will apply to J. M. Smith, Clanton, Ala., and they will be met with conveyance.

Respectfully,
C. H. ROBERTSON, Sec. & Treas.

Stanton.

Editor Banner—Please allow me a small space in your paper for a little chat with its many readers.

Our Sunday school at this place is very good, although we are lacking something yet; the attendance is small.

Mr. N. L. Broadhead has moved his family to this place.

Rev. Martin filled his regular appointment here last Saturday and Sunday and preached an excellent sermon. His text was "I pray thee have me excused."

The singing at the M. E. church last Sunday night was a grand success.

Miss Mae Cox visited her cousin at Dixie last Sunday.

Mr. R. L. Reynolds and Miss Unice Milom of Riderville were visiting this place last Sunday.

Mr. Charley Gay of Valley Creek was a pleasant visitor here Sunday. Miss Vivian Abrams is visiting her friends, Misses Buzzella and Stella Broadhead. I will ring off with best wishes to the Banner and its many readers.

W. C. T. U. CONVENE

Thirty-Fourth Annual Convention at Nashville.

290 DELEGATES ON HAND

Convention Was Called to Order by Mrs. Lillian M.N. Stevens of Portland, Me., the President—Encouraging Temperance Reports.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 8.—At 9:30 o'clock Friday morning the thirty-fourth annual convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance union was called to order in the First Presbyterian church, this city, by its president, Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens, of Portland, Me.

Between five and six hundred delegates were in their seats when the president rapped for order. They are here from every state in the union, several negro women being among the number.

The last W. C. T. U. convention held in Nashville was twenty years ago this month. After organization, the report of the executive committee and the appointment of committees, the president delivered her annual address.

Following the delivery of the president's address there was an evangelistic hour held, presided over by Miss Elizabeth W. Greenwood, national evangelistic superintendent.

The session Friday afternoon was devoted principally to the hearing of committee reports and reports of the corresponding secretary and treasurer. The two last reports were of a highly encouraging nature, and show the union to be in a flourishing condition.

After the reports were read "the royal temperance legion pranks" was discussed by Miss Margaret Wintrager, of Illinois, the general secretary. There followed ten minute addresses by the various superintendents.

Several elaborate social functions have been planned by the ladies of the city in honor of the visiting W. C. T. U. delegates.

LITIGATION OVER ESTATE.

Decision Rendered in Orphans' Court at Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Nov. 8.—The orphans' court of this city has decided that Dr. Thomas W. Evans, the famous dentist who died in Paris several years ago and over whose estate there has been much litigation was a Parisian, and that the state of Pennsylvania has no right to collect the collateral inheritance tax on the property located in France.

The proceedings brought by register of wills, Mr. Irwin, raised the question of residence of the dentist and involved the collection of the 5 per cent state tax on upward of $1,000,000 of the $5,000,000.

Dr. Evans was originally a resident of Philadelphia and register Irwin contended that he had never announced his intention of permanently residing in Paris.

GOT $3,500 FROM BANK.

Bandits in Dakota Make Haul and Escape with Booty.

Canova, S. Dak., Nov. 8.—Seven armed bandits early Thursday blew the safe in the Interstate bank and secured $3,500. They made their escape.

While two bandits worked at the bank the others guarded the streets. The occupants of a hotel were aroused by the explosions, but the robbers opened fire and drove them back, threatening to kill the first man who appeared. The hotel was riddled with bullets.

Where lights were burning in the houses, the bandits, at the points of guns, forced the owners to extinguish them.

To Curtail Production.

Charlotte, N. C., Nov. 8.—Facing the serious proposition that there is not much of a demand, nor price, for yarn, the Southern Hard Yard Spinners' association held a conference here Thursday afternoon, to determine the best thing to do in regard to the situation, whether to do in regard to the situation, whether to discontinue temporarily the making of yarns, close down part time or face the results. The conference was held in the assembly room of the Southern Manufacturers' club at 3 o'clock and about 750,000 spindles were represented at roll call, embracing mills in nearly all the southern states. It was finally decided to curtail production one-third.

Russ Grafter Convicted.

St. Petersburg, Nov. 8.—M. Gurko, vice minister of the interior, who was implicated in the great grain scandal during the famine relief operations of 1906 and who was placed on trial before the senate as a high court of justice, has been found guilty of malfeasance, sentenced to dismissal from office and ordered to make restitution to the amount of over $250,000. Through an illegal contract M. Gurko made a deal with an irresponsible individual named Lidvol to supply all the grain to the famine-stricken provinces and advanced him $400,000 without security.

RAILWAY CASUALTIES.

Number of People Killed and Injured in One Year.

Washington, Nov. 8.—The interstate commerce commission, in an announcement of the railroads of the United States during the year ended June 30, [illegible] 21,886, or 2,000 killed and 70,000 injured, an increase of 10,282 casualties, of 775 in the killed and 9,577 in the injured, as compared with the previous year. The figures include only accidents to passengers and to employees while actually on duty or about the trains.

The bulletin says that there have been heavy increases in all items except in rear collisions and [illegible] against overhead obstructions. The number of passengers killed and injured in collisions and derailments has increased to an alarming degree. In this item the very large total reported in 1906 is now exceeded by 17 per cent.

The report for the last quarter (included in these figures for the year) embracing April, May and June, shows 1,065 persons killed and 18,540 injured, 1,896 collisions and 1,971 derailments, involving $3,232,872 damage to trains and roadway.

RUSSIA TAKES IT SERIOUSLY.

Believes United States and Japan Will Come to Hostilities.

St. Petersburg, Nov. 8.—The talk of the possibility of a war between the United States and Japan, which throughout has been taken seriously in Russia, is bringing many volunteers to the American embassy who say they are anxious to serve in the United States army in case of hostilities.

A report is also circulating in military circles here that the American army in the Philippines needs instructors, especially for the artillery and engineer corps. Five or six Russian officers of these branches of the service apply daily at the embassy for commissions and are disappointed by the assurances that there is no likelihood of Japan and the United States going to war.

DECLARED ILLEGAL.

Five Thousand Chicago Couples Declared Illegally Wed.

Chicago, Nov. 8.—Five thousand marriages of Chicago couples which have been performed in Hammond, Ind., within the last five years, were declared to be illegal in an opinion rendered at Hammond by Attorney Bomberger to Ernest L. Shortridge, clerk of the circuit and superior courts.

In his opinion he holds that licenses issued by the superior court of Lake county, located at Hammond, are issued without legal authority and that the only court of Lake county, which is empowered to issue licenses, is the circuit court at Crown Point.

Pride Stood in Way of Fortune.

Norwalk, Conn., Nov. 8.—John Harding, to whom P. T. Barnum offered $8,000 a week to exhibit himself, is dead here. Harding's pride would never permit him to place himself on show and so while he might have amassed a considerable fortune, he died poor. Harding was 42 years old, but he was no bigger than a normal two-year-old baby. His arms and legs were gnarled and twisted and from the moment of his birth they were in unceasing motion.

To Lay New Cable Line.

Mobile, Ala., Nov. 8.—A cable from Mobile to Cuban ports is what is proposed by J. H. Waterbury, general superintendent inspector of the Western Union Telegraph company, who is in Mobile. Mr. Waterbury says that negotiations are already under way for the laying of the cable but further than this he will say nothing. At present the cable business to Cuban ports from Mobile goes by way of New Orleans.

Negro Publicly Lashed.

Canton, Miss., Nov. 8.—The intense feeling which has existed here for some days, because of crimes committed by negroes, found vent Thursday when Joe Shaw, a negro, was taken from the city jail and publicly lashed by a posse of citizens. Shaw was charged with a breach of the peace, and defied arrest, barricading himself in his home, but was finally captured.

Cholera on the Decrease.

St. Petersburg, Nov. 8.—Cholera is everywhere on the decrease in Russia owing to the influence of the cold weather and the danger this year is regarded as being over. It is considered certain, however, that cholera will break out again in localities next season and a conference has been called to meet in St. Petersburg to discuss preventative measures.

Woman Sent Up for One Year.

Huntsville, Ala., Nov. 8.—Mrs. Martha Connally, who was tried for murder of her son-in-law, has been convicted of manslaughter in the second degree and sentenced to one year in prison.

Portland Bank Engages Gold.

Portland, Ore., Nov. 8.—The First National bank of this city Thursday engaged $80,000 gold in London. This makes nearly $1,000,000 that this bank has secured within the past few days.

MAKES NEW RECORD

Lusitania Crosses Ocean in 4 Days, 19 Hours, 10 Minutes.

BEST DAY'S RUN 617 MILES

Giant Converter Has Breathed New Youth with a New Record Written in Her Log Book and $10,000,000 in Gold in Her Strong Room.

New York, Nov. 8.—With ten million of gold in her refinery bunkers and a new transatlantic record written in her log, the Cunard turbiner, Lusitania, steamed past Sandy Hook lightship at 1:40 o'clock Friday morning.

In one grand performance the great vessel broke her own world's record and brought to the relief of the money market here $10,000,000 in gold.

The westbound trip was made approximately in four days, nineteen hours and ten minutes. The exact time can only be known from the official record. Her hourly average was a little better than 24 knots an hour, and she has probably beaten the record about 40 minutes.

The former western record of the turbiner, completed Oct. 11 last, was four days, nineteen hours and fifty minutes. The average speed on that trip was 24 knots an hour for the distance of 2,784 miles. The best day's runs was 617 knots.

Taggart Successor.

Washington, Nov. 8.—Secretary Root announced Friday that David Jayne Hill, American minister to the Netherlands, and a former assistant secretary of state, will be named as ambassador to Berlin to succeed Mr. Tower, who is about to retire on account of ill health. Mr. Hill has had great experience in the diplomatic service.

Police Seize False Passports.

Libau, Russia, Nov. 8.—The police Thursday searched the houses of several agents of the line of Russian steamers running from Libau to New York, resulting in the seizure of several false passports and the arrest of the agents and many emigrants who were intending to embark for the United States.

Farmer Robbed While Asleep.

Columbus, Ga., Nov. 8.—J. L. and W. J. Robinson, farmers of Marion county, reported to the police Thursday morning that the former had been robbed of a sum of money while he slept during the night. He described the man, and soon an officer arrested Will Rogers. He was turned over to the superior court in a bond of $50.

Price of Seats Drops.

New York, Nov. 8.—A seat in the New York stock exchange was sold Thursday for $60,000, the lowest price recorded since the year 1904, when a seat brought $67,000. The high record price was reached late in 1901, when a seat brought $95,000, and a sale for a like sum was recorded in the early part of 1906.

Church Built in 1729 Burned.

Montreal, Nov. 8.—The Roman Catholic church at Longue Pointe, built in 1729, burned Thursday night. Loss $75,000, with $16,000 insurance. The church contained a valuable sacramental service in silver brought over from France at the time the church was built and this was lost in the fire.

First Victim of New Game.

San Sebastian, Spain, Nov. 8.—The first death as a result of the new game of diabolo is reported from Pampelunta. A boy who was playing the game threw the shoot very high. He misjudged its position as it fell and it struck him on the temple, inflicting an injury with resulted in death.

Fell on Steps, Severed Eyeball.

Yatesville, Ga., Nov. 8.—The little 4-year-old child of Thad Persons, of this place, met with a serious accident Thursday. The little one had a pocket-knife open and started down the steps and in some way his foot slipped and he fell, inflicting a wound over his right eye, almost severing the eyeball.

BRIEF DISPATCHES.

Dominion Park, near Montreal, a pleasure resort, burned Thursday. A loss of $200,000 was sustained.

John C. Dueber, owner of the Dueber Hampden watch works at Canton, O., said to be the largest watch factory in the world, died after a short illness Thursday.

Incomplete returns from Virginia's elections indicate that 13 republicans out of 100 members of the house, and six republicans, out of 40 members of the senate, have been elected.

William Marconi will sail from Quebec for England on the Victorian on Friday morning. The cause of his sudden departure is unknown. He reserved his tickets at the last moment by wire.

That the end of the movement of gold from England to America has not been reached was shown Thursday when Goldman, Sachs & Co., announced the engagement of $1,000,000 for import from London. This makes the total for the movement $60,170,000.

KENYON EXECUTIVE ELEPHANT.

In Presence of 21 Others She Grows Wild Enraged with Rage.

Bridgeport, Conn., Nov. 8.—The Columbia, the first elephant born in this country, was executed Friday in the presence of 21 other elephants, including her mother, because she was considered neither safe or sane. Columbia was born in Philadelphia 21 years ago and was easily handled until a month or two ago.

The execution of Columbia was simple. Elder Smith shackled her to one corner of the elephant house. A noose was thrown around her neck and with the aid of hook and tackle, five men pulled the rope around her neck so tightly that the elephant was choked before she had time to make an outcry. Her gurgling noes were the only sign of pain.

The body, weighing 9,250 pounds was dragged out of the barn by Alberta, one of the largest elephants in the herd. It will be cut up into small pieces.

The hide, feet and tail will be saved. The teeth are to be used as paper weights, the feet for umbrella stands, and the hide makes a fine leather covering.

COUNTING CASH CAUSED DEATH

Cashier Falls a Victim to Myxedema, a Rare Disease.

New York, Nov. 8.—Myxedema, a rare disease, which was brought on in his case by continual contact with paper money, has caused the death here of Edward H. Hall, formerly cashier of the firm of Arnold, Constable & Co.

Twenty years spent in counting paper money infected him and for 10 years before his death he has been a sufferer from the malady that baffled medical skill.

It was Mr. Hall's custom to moisten his thumbs while counting, and years of work so affected his hands that the skin became dry and hard and cracked open in cold weather. A general thickening of the tissue set in, which was followed by complications involving the kidneys and circulatory system, later developing into Bright's disease.

NEW ELECTRIC LINE.

Backed by Prominent Capitalists of Atlanta and Other Places.

Marietta, Ga., Nov. 9.—An enthusiastic mass meeting was held here on Wednesday to promote a new interurban line from Marietta to Macland, then to Powder Springs, Austell and on to Atlanta.

The line is said to be backed by prominent capitalists of Atlanta and other places.

The country along the line is thickly populated and besides being a paying proposition it will be a great benefit to the citizens along the line. The new agricultural school of the seventh district is located at Macland, which is one of the most thriving communities in Cobb county.

Application for incorporation will be made in the next few days and the line will be called the Marietta-Macland Railway company.

UNION PRINTERS STRIKE.

Walk Out in Two Large Printing Establishments at Knoxville.

Knoxville, Tenn., Nov. 8.—Union printers in two of the largest job printing plants in this city quit work Saturday, following the employers' refusal of the Typographical union's demand for an eight-hour day, an increase in wages and other concessions.

The employers also announce that on and after next Monday their establishments will be conducted as "open shops."

The union's contract with the local job printing houses expires Sunday, and the employers' refusal follows the union's demand in a proposed new scale. A meeting of the local union will be held to take further action.

Employers say they are determined to enforce the "open shop" policy.

Tragedy at Rome, Ga.

Rome, Ga., Nov. 9.—Robert S. Mitchell, a musician, shot and killed Joe Sloop, a cigarmaker, in front of the Central hotel Friday. It seems there had been some trouble between the men on account of Sloop's wife. The shooting created great excitement in the city. In order to protect Mitchell he was carried to Atlanta and placed in the Fulton County jail for safekeeping.

Loses Life from Fall.

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 9.—Elisha Parker, who several weeks ago fell from a scaffolding at the Warrior Manufacturing company's plant, died on Thursday from the effects. The remains were shipped to Phoenix City for interment.

Well Known Railroader Dead.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 9.—W. W. Wheeler, traveling freight agent for the Illinois Central railroad, died at his home here Saturday morning. Mr. Wheeler was widely known in railway circles.

Berlin, Nov. 9.—Crown Princess Frederick William gave birth to a son Saturday morning. The first child of the crown princess was born July 4, 1882.

A $3,000,000 BLAZE

Monstrous Fire Occurs at Superior, Wisconsin.

GRAIN ELEVATOR IS BURNED

Three Flour Mills, Forty Homes and Seven Hundred Thousand Bushels of Grain Wiped Out of Existence—One Man Supposed to Have Perished.

Duluth, Minn., Nov. 9.—Fire which started in the Great Northern elevator at Superior, Wis., about 9 o'clock Friday night and burned all night, destroyed the elevator, three flour mills, forty homes and 700,000 bushels of grain.

Two scows, a derrick and two tugs were also destroyed.

The loss is estimated at $3,000,000.

One man, who entered the plant of the Duluth Superior Storing company to rescue a tool chest, was not seen again, and is thought to have perished in the flames.

The estimated losses are partially distributed as follows:

Great Northern Elevator and Power house, $1,250,000; Freeman flour mill and elevator, $250,000; Great Lakes Dredge and Dock company, $75,000; Minnetonka flour mill and elevator, $50,000; Webster Chair company, $30,000; Superior Shipbuilding company, $25,000; Whitney Bros., marine contractors, $25,000; Northern Pacific railway bridge, $5,000.

The fire, the cause of which is unknown, started at the southwest corner of elevator "A" dock and before it was discovered had spread to the elevator proper. An alarm was turned in and four fire tugs responded. The intense heat, however, drove the tugs from the slip and unable to do anything to save, the elevator they concentrated all their efforts in an attempt to save the adjoining property from destruction.

Flying sparks soon ignited the Grand Republic Mill, the dock of the Great Lakes Dredge and Dock company, and the plant of the Duluth-Superior Storage company, which contained the finishing plant of the Webster Chair company. The Globe elevator, owned by the Peavy Grain company, also caught fire, as did also the saw mill of Peyton, Kimball and Barber, but the flames at both these buildings were extinguished before much damage was done.

The Northern Pacific bridge, connecting Duluth and Superior, was damaged enough to interfere with the traffic between the two cities.

$50,000 FIRE AT SALISBURY.

Famous Old Mansion Block Was Destroyed by Flames.

Salisbury, N. C., Nov. 9.—Friday morning fire broke out in W. H. Huff's grocery store and destroyed the famous old Mansion block, part of which was built before the revolutionary war along with a numbr of stores, the loss being about $50,000.

It was in the Mansion block that Mrs. Elizabeth Maxwell Steele entertained General Greene, and at least one one occasion George Washington dined there.

A policeman, attempting to wake Mr. and Mrs. Sneider and Miss Russell on the second floor, was overcome and carried down with Mr. Sneider. Mrs. Sneider and Miss Russell were rescued from the flames by firemen with ladders.

For a time it looked as if the entire business section of the city would be destroyed.

$40,000 Fire Damage.

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 9.—Fire at Corbin, Ky., Saturday caused a loss of $40,000 in the business section.

FELL THROUGH ELEVATOR.

Probably Fatal Accident Occurs at Mobile, Ala.

Mobile, Ala., Nov. 9.—News received here from Hattiesburg, Miss., states that three white men and a negro were flung downward eighty feet in the elevator at the Carter building Friday night. The negro escaped unhurt, but the white men were all removed unconscious, and it is doubtful if any of them will recover.

The victims are Dr. W. H. Doty, Charles Schurch and Clirente Green, John Hurt, the negro.

Sheriff Killed by Train.

Danville, Va., Nov. 9.—Sheriff J. H. Board, of Amherst county, Virginia, was run over by a Southern railway train in front of the passenger station here Friday night, sustaining injuries from which he died several hours later. Both of his legs were torn off at the knee. He was attempting to board a moving northbound train. He was about 55 years of age, and his daughter, Mrs. N. G. Perkins, of Stanford, Fla., was at the station at the time of the tragedy.

Falls To Death from His Window.

Mobile, Ala., Nov. 9.—Frank Over, an employe of the Otis Elevator company, aged 35 years, fell from the tenth story of the unfinished Van Antwerp building Friday afternoon and was instantly killed. DEATH OF COL. J. H. [illegible]

Editor of the Savannah [illegible] and a Leading Georgia Democrat, Dies Here.

[illegible] Hull, proprietor of the Hull Morning News, died at his residence at the country home of Hope, near the city, of [illegible] stomach disease. He became ill last April, thought he could not live, but he exhibited marvelous native powers for one of his years, recovered sufficiently to go [illegible] N. Y., about the 4th of July. There he suffered a relapse and returned home. He improved. But two weeks after his arrival here he suffered another attack, his condition since being [illegible]. A widow and five sons and one daughter survive.

Sketch of Colonel Hull.

John Holbrook Hull was a native of Charleston, S. C. He was of Huguenot descent, and was born December 28, 1840. He began life at the bottom of the ladder and by perseverance, steady application, executive ability and [illegible] ment were features of his character.

He was one of a family of [illegible] children. His father was a [illegible] binder, bookseller and printer. From his earliest years [illegible] till had been in one way or another connected with the printing business.

In public office Colonel Hull was chairman of the state democratic executive committee, and in 1896 the Georgia member of the democratic national committee, the most important national politics that he ever accepted. During President Cleveland's administration he was offered the most important consulate in his gift, but declined it. In 1882 he was a candidate for governor of Georgia, and made a most remarkable run. Hon. Joseph M. Terrell and the gallant Guerry, the prohibition candidate.

In 1906 he was again a candidate against Hon. Clark Howell, Hon. Hoke Smith, Hon. Rufus E. Lester and Colonel James M. Smith, and secured the same dignified support, which was probably the most [illegible] campaign "in the annals of the state."

Morgan County Alabama [illegible]

Decatur, Ala., Nov. 11—[illegible] county was carried overwhelmingly for prohibition at Saturday's election. More than a thousand women and children paraded the streets of Decatur carrying flags and banners and singing prohibition songs. Mrs. Lide Meriwether, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union served hot lunches at the voting places. The campaign opened in Friday with several speeches by A. Maples, of Texas, [illegible] Decatur and Mrs. Nannie Cunningham, as, spoke in New Decatur. The campaign in this county was a [illegible] affair, the antis made no effort whatever to conduct any sort of a campaign.

Three Boys Burned to Death.

St. Paul, Minn., Nov. 11—[illegible] bodies have been found of Arthur [illegible] and Fred Dieschmeister, aged 13 years, respectively, who are supposed to have been burned to death in a fire which destroyed the barn of the Northern Cooperage company. A third employee of the company is missing, and it is feared he has perished. The property loss is $40,000.

SQUARED ACCOUNTS.

Also Won a Reputation and Saved Himself Further Trouble.

Press agents, like other individuals, have their troubles, but there is one in Philadelphia who has fewer of them than the ordinary man. Asked one day how he managed so well to get along with everybody, he explained:

"Well, I won a reputation. You see, when a press agent is able to give a man heart disease from which he actually dies his customers will prefer to have a proper regard for their lives. I was the press agent for a German singing fest. I naturally used the German papers.

"There was the editor who had the idea that he wasn't getting all that was due. Nevertheless he published columns after columns of type and platitudes.

"Afterward the managers of the show received a bill for $800 'for advertising.' They were enraged. 'What shall we do?' they demanded. 'Don't get excited,' I exhorted 'em. 'I'll fix that allright.'

"I went to the editor a friend, and, going to the type desk, I wrote the finest billhead you ever laid eyes on. I printed it in two inks. It read, 'The Two Continents Engraving Company; John Smith, manager.' Next I wrote this account, 'To Peter Jacob Schmidtheiser, Dr., to cuts for German festival, $800.'

"When Schmidtheiser received the bill he fainted. He revived and came for me.

"'Ter vot is it you scharge me for der cuts vot I could pay for 40 cents ablece, eh?' he demanded.

"'That's all right, old man,' I assured him. 'You might buy these cuts from anybody else for 40 cents apiece, but not of me.'

"He refused to pay the bill, but not long afterward he was stricken with heart disease and died. His executors found the bill, with its balance of $70 in my favor. They asked me what I'd take to settle, and I told them $50. They paid it cheerfully, and since then I haven't had any trouble."—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Resourceful Legislator.

"It will be impossible for us to transact any public business tonight," said the president of the city council, "because of the lack of a quorum."

"Mr. Chairman," said the new member, arising quickly, "I have been elected on a pledge to my constituency that I shall work untiringly and unceasingly for the upbuilding and uplifting of our city, and I now and here move that a committee be appointed to consider the immediate purchase of an [illegible] a quorum in the market afterward, and that the committee be instructed to secure the quorum and have it properly installed by the next meeting night. And furthermore," he said, with a fine patriotic touch, "let us obtain a good American quorum and not one of those ancient Roman [illegible]"—Success Magazine.

In the Swim.

A serious accident happened at the supper table. Somebody—it's always "somebody" who is to blame—upset a pitcher of water over the cloth. There was a general scampering and a calling for somebody to remedy the mishap.

"How could you be so careless, Tom?" cried Freddie indignantly.

"Never mind, my boy," replied Tom, in his airy way. "It's all right. We're all in the swim now."—St. Louis Republic.

NOTICE.

In accordance with an act of the last Legislature, requiring the Sheriffs of their respective Counties, to procure from the office of the United States Internal Revenue Collector, a list of all persons or corporations in their counties to whom license have been issued, for the sale of Spirituous, Vinous or Malt Liquors, and to publish the same in some newspaper published in said county.

I have made this examination, and find that there has been only one license issued for the county of Chilton, and that to the Clanton Dispensary for the year from Jan. 1st 1907 to this the 23rd day of Oct. 1907.

A Real "Horse" Race.

If you would see a horse strapped, booted, tanned and geared to the limit you must seek such a track as you see at the old time country fair. Here comes an awkward flea bitten grey which never went under 2:50 in his life. He is bobbed and checked and goggled and hitched up sidewise, lengthwise and crosswise until there is more harness than horse. You wonder how his driver ever got him into this rigging and how he will get him out again without cutting him free with a jackknife. A farmer with a gray beard and twinkling eye observes to his neighbor:

"Last time John Martin had that ging out on the road I told him he had the old cripple overloaded with fust aids to the injured. Them straps that was cal'lated to hold up his knees must ha' pulled too tight, and the critter was yanked clean off the ground. What John was gittin' ready for was a race for flyin' machines, not a hoss trot."—David Lansing in Outing Magazine.

Dina Moe and Dina Mite.

Mr. Cracker, a young colored gentleman of our city, had just obtained employment in one of our department stores as an experienced porter, but after a short time proved to be unfit for the position. Being fired, he thereby gained the nickname of Fire Cracker. Fire Cracker was deeply in love with a young woman of his own race by the name of Miss Moe and after a short acquaintance found that her surname was Dina. He went to Dina Moe and said:

"Dina Moe, does you lub me?"

She quickly replied, "No."

Not being disheartened and at the same time remembering the motto he learned at school, "If at first you don't succeed try, try again," he went to Dina Moe again and said:

"Dina Moe, could you learn to lub me?"

Dina this time rolled the white of her eyes and, looking Fire Cracker in the face, answered:

"Dina—Mite!"—Judge's Library.

Snapdragon Seed Pods.

The antirrhinum, or snapdragon, is one of the old fashioned garden flowers known by every one. Although it is a visitor from southern Europe, it has been here so long that it has become naturalized. When we say "lion's mouth," "frog's mouth," "calf's mouth," "rabbit's mouth," we mean snapdragon, all these names being suggested by its grotesque manikins cuddle in. But there is something still more grotesque if we will wait till the seed time and gather the dried, brown skeleton of the seed pod. Look at them sideways, under a bright lamplight if possible, and you will find they have quite a resemblance to a rhinoceros. Remove the calyx and the little horns on the nose and look at them from the front, and they have a still more striking resemblance to human skulls, and by turning them about you get all sorts of queer expressions on the grinning mouth.—St. Nicholas.

He Remembered.

Old Commodore Vanderbilt was always very democratic in spirit. Sitting on the porch of a fashionable hotel at a fashionable resort on one occasion, it is related that the commodore saw a lady approaching with whom he was acquainted. His wife and daughter, who recognized her, could scarcely contain their anger when he arose and politely addressed her.

"Don't you know," asked the daughter after she had gone, "that horrid woman used to sell poultry to us?"

"Yes," responded the old millionaire, "and I remember when your mother sold root beer and I peddled oysters in New Jersey."

Horse on Them.

The wooden horse was standing before the beleaguered city.

"That seems a heavy beast," remarked Paris to Hector, surveying it critically. "Of what weight would you say it was?"

"Troy weight, of course," answered Hector. Whereat envy turned Paris green.—Harper's Weekly.

An Appropriate Tablet.

A lady wrote upon a window some verses intimating her design of never marrying. A gentleman wrote the following lines underneath:

The lady whose resolve these words betoken
Wrote them on glass, to show it may be broken.

To the Sons of the Banner and Public Generally.

I regret that I was not here at the mass meeting in Clanton on the 9th inst. I desire to say I have an earnest sympathy with the objects of said meeting, and I only regret that our people have been so lukewarm during the last eighteen months of prosperity, but it is better to wake up and better ourselves once than never. The financial condition of present is from various causes, one of which is lack of confidence, which is one of our main stocks in trade to a prosperous and contented people. I want to say further, to the farmer especially, that the main trouble is at the North. Our Southern banks are full of cash, but for them to withhold your deposits or my deposits, is to protect us, and I predict that we will stand by and trust our banking institutions of the South, live faithfully up to the teachings of the Cotton Association and Farmers Union, and during the coming year 1908, economize our money and time, that the present financial trouble will prove a blessing to the whole South, if not the entire country. Keep your cotton until you get 15c unless you owe money which you must pay. Keep it in your house on your farm in the seed, as in this way it gains in weight and condition, whereas it loses in the bale. Then when you do gin and go to market it, do so gradually and slowly, as it is the rush of any farm product on the market that brings disaster to the farmer. Yours for prosperity,

F. A. GULLEDGE.

A Sensitive Monkey.

The most pathetic of all monkey stories is one which Grant-Duff has contributed to recorded. The Dublin zoo had a fabulous ape whose delight was the friendship of the principal of the establishment. He never passed the cage without a handshake and a friendly chat until once a member of the royal family went visiting. That day the principal, too engrossed with the duties of showing the august guest round the place, overlooked his poor relation. The ape grieved and sulked and when he went again to its cage turned savagely from him. The human friend was sent absolutely to Coventry by his humble admirer. And straightway the health of the sulking, sorrowing animal began to decline. It fell a victim to consumption. When the end was obviously at hand the principal went to look. The ape seemed to brighten up at his approach. It crept feebly to the front of its cage, thrust out its hand for a grasp of reconciliation and forgiveness, then lay down and died.—St. James' Gazette.

The Wrong Goldsmith.

"A friend of mine," said a political orator, "was once a good deal annoyed while addressing a meeting by a man in the front row who howled like a dog. At every telling point in my friend's argument this man would emit frightful howls and spoil the effect.

"My friend asked the name of the man and was told that it was Harry Loff. Then he said in a loud voice:

"'Mr. Loff, it is plain that our friend Goldsmith had you in mind when he said:

"The watchdog's voice that bayed the whispering wind,
And the loud Loff that spoke the vacant mind.

"'He said that, did he?' cried Loff furiously, and he turned and struck a little fat man behind him a hard blow over the head.

"It was only after a five minutes' scrimmage and much profane abuse that Mr. Loff was convinced that the Goldsmith referred to was the long dead poet and not the little fat man of the same name."

Farmers' Union Meeting.

In pursuance with the Thirteenth State and County Plan[illegible] a call meeting of the Farmers' Union met in call headed at Clanton on Nov. 9, 1907 at 10 a.m. with a large attendance of farmers. A committee was appointed to confer on [illegible] the business men of Clanton up with the committee, G. A. Council J. M. Robinson, M. F. Lett. After several good speeches by W. F. Lowry, L. H. Parnell, W. [illegible] and L. H. Reynolds and others

Moved and carried that we recommend to the farmers not to make cotton this earlier than Dec. 1, amended that farmers raise their meat and bread at home, and we ask the merchants to co-operate with the farmers in making cotton due Dec. 1.

Resolutions offered by M. F. Lett and unanimously adopted as follows:

Whereas the time for a decided change is now here. There is no denying the fact that we have a short cotton crop and that there will be a jump in the market price. That it will soon be upward and the man who holds his cotton will reap the benefit of higher price.

1st. Resolved that we the members of the Farmers' Union and also members of the Cotton Association of Chilton county join hands in this resolution in asking all producers who have their bale and first to help us in this determined stand to hold our cotton for the minimum prices set by our national organization at 15 cents.

2nd. Resolved, that in justice to our families, our homes and our country we believe that we are right in our resolutions and we ask all bankers and merchants to assist us in our just rights by helping us to obtain for the price [illegible] and all newspaper men [illegible] this resolution to publication. Respectfully,

[illegible] BIBBER, Co. Sec. & Treas.

[illegible] Postmaster of Gasconade, [illegible] Daniel A. Bush, says of DeWitt's Kidney and Bladder Pills, "I was doing so well and improving in health, that I cannot say too much for your Kidney & Bladder Pills. I feel like a new man." DeWitt's Kidney and Bladder Pills are sold by Upchurch Drug Co.

Mansfield's Fancy Collar.

Richard Mansfield, when a mere boy, was playing the leading role in a tragedy, in the last scene of which he was strangled. Sometimes, however, the actor who was to simulate strangling him became too realistic. Several times he nearly incapacitated the principal player for finishing his great scene. It came to such a pass that drastic measures had to be taken. One evening, in the greenroom, Mansfield sidled up to the muscular player who was to strangle him. The latter noted a strange addition to Mansfield's costume. Instead of the collaret of lace it was his wont to wear, bound about his neck was a leather band thickly studded with prongs.

"And what is that for?" he asked.

"Oh, that?" replied Mansfield, with the rising inflection and a smile in his voice; "that is merely a trifle, a mere trifle to defer the collection of my life insurance. Most inconveniently the healthy condition of my neck and throat is necessary for the pursuance of my profession and the earning of my daily bread."

The other actor saw the point and apologized. Mansfield took off the collar and never after suffered at his companion player's hands in the big scene.

Fire Escape on a Steamer.

"We're used to odd questions," said the skipper of a river steamer as he stood on the wharf in the center of a crowd of querying passengers, "and when I get this bunch aboard I'll breathe easier and tell you the latest. All aboard? Very good. This is it: The other day as we left the pier and swung into the stream a woman approached with her two children. I saw I was it and waited. 'Where's the fire escape?' she demanded. 'My husband told me never to travel without finding out where the fire escape was.' I knew it would never do to tell her we had no fire escape, but I had to study a bit for an answer. Finally I pointed to the rigging ladder running up our solitary and never used mast. 'There it is,' I told her, 'and if a fire breaks out you just run up that.' She appeared quite satisfied, but I hope she'll never be aboard ship when a fire breaks out. If she is and runs up a mast there'll be trouble sure."—Philadelphia Record.

What Gives a Book World Significance?

According to a reliable estimate, the number of books published each year throughout the world is at the present time about 7,000. Most of these go into well merited oblivion. Some enjoy a temporary popularity. A very limited number are translated into several languages and become part of the permanent heritage of humanity. From the point of view of both writer and reader few questions can be of greater importance than this: What is the quality that makes a book vital, that gives it world importance? In the largest sense, it may be answered that the universal book is the book that transcends all national boundaries and appeals to universal emotions. But these emotions vary in intensity from age to age and from century to century.—Current Literature.

Editor Banner:—If you can allow this article space in your esteemed paper, I would be glad to have you do so; if not, let it go to the waste basket. On yesterday (the 30th) Mr. Calvin P. Jones and Miss Mattie E. Jones were married by me, at Mr. Pinkney Jones, who is the father of the bride; Mr. Pinkney Jones being the father of the bridegroom. After the marriage the assembly met at Corinth church and engaged in a Bible school worship which was grand, in which some new work was introduced by Deacon Norris, who is the superintendent. Then we returned and had a beautiful dinner. After which the day was spent in a song service which was enjoyed by all.

Letter to W. T. Callen

Clanton, Ala.

Dear Sir: If a customer wants $35.50 do you give him $75?

Suppose you should hear of one of your customers doing a thing like that and not knowing it, what would you say next time he wants discount?

We'll venture half your men are doing that very thing without a suspicion.

Men who paint any other paint than Devoe are paying $75 for $35.50 or some other such figure.

10 gallons Devoe is enough for a good size house two coats; 15 or 20 isn't too much of another paint. There's $8.75 or $17.50 for 5 or 10 extra gallons; besides $2 to $4 a gallon for putting it on; that's $10 to $40. That's how half the houses stores factories warehouses shops barns fences are painted: $50 for paint and labor; $25 to $50 more for not knowing what paint to put on.

The one to put on is the paint that takes least gallons and makes least bills for paint and labor.

Yours truly
F W DEVOE & CO

Vida.

All Vida community is enjoying good health.

The Methodist church is in a prosperous condition, conducted by Rev. Miller. The literary school progressing nicely also. The Sunday school, which is beautiful to behold, along with the sweet choir, lifts the beholder's soul. The Ladies Aid Society is working finely.

The Cruse & Sharon Lumber Co. are vigorous, hustling and honorable. The work, however, is suspended indifinitely for repairs and to adjust a lot of new machinery.

Our people are not behind with cows, hogs, chickens and gardens.

Mr. Ira Campbelle and wife last week made a very pleasant visit up toward Jemison, visiting their daughter and family, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Jones. Their six boys are quite interesting.

May the faithful Banner never grow smaller. We are always glad for Banner day to come with news from very many.

Mrs. Ira Campbell.

How to Treat a Sprain.

Sprains, swellings and lameness are promptly relieved by Chamberlain's Pain Balm. This liniment reduces inflammation and soreness so that a sprain may be cured in about one-third the time required by the usual treatment. For sale by Upchurch Drug Co., Clanton; A. Horo, Thorsby.

Enterprise.

Please allow me space to say a few words about the school at Enterprise. We wish the school good success. Farmers are done gathering for this time. For fear of the waste basket I will ring off, as this is my first. PAPA'S MAN.

"Necessity is the mother of invention"

Women have suffered with their feet for years because they could not get a nice shoe that would not hurt. The necessity is at last met in the "Society" shoe for women.

Nice, graceful curves, conforming to the feet with an elegance so simple that there is beauty and comfort in every pair.

Thousands of women have ruined their feet because their shoes were not builded along foot conforming lines.

That's why the "Society" shoe was necessary. The necessity for a nice dress shoe that won't pinch and hurt is making the "Society" shoe a friend to the foot and the most popular seller, at the price, we have ever found.

Rabbits in the East.

In Cyprus, at the important date of the first tooth appearing, friends gather, singing songs, while the child is bathed in water and boiled wheat. Afterward thirty-two of the boiled grains are strung on a thread and stitched to the baby's cap, which, of course, promptly produces the safe cutting of the other teeth.

A pretty custom prevails on the Isle of Rhodes, for there, on the eighth day from birth, the infant, after a final bath of wine and myrtle, is tenderly laid in a cradle surrounded by lighted tapers while a child approaches, touches its lips with honey and says, "Be then as sweet as this honey."—Los Angeles Times.

Got His Answer.

"I suppose it's always hog killing time in your town, Miss Packer," sneered the New Yorker.

"Oh, yes," replied the fair visitor from Chicago, "but don't let that keep you from visiting us. We always protect our guests."—Philadelphia Press.

Most people know that if they have been sick they need Scott's Emulsion to bring back health and strength.

But the strongest point about Scott's Emulsion is that you don't have to be sick to get results from it.

It keeps up the athlete's strength, puts fat on thin people, makes a fretful baby happy, brings color to a pale girl's cheeks, and prevents coughs, colds and consumption.

Food in concentrated form for sick and well, young and old, rich and poor.

And it contains no drugs and no alcohol.

ALL DRUGGISTS; 50c. AND $1.00.

and wife, and blood, the music and accentuated to make the Frenchman reckless. The poetry of his French nature was uppermost.

"It is a world's music throbbing in one's feet—this dance! Ah, mademoiselle, to a man"— He paused.

"Yes, to a man"— she repeated slowly.

"It is sometimes to carry heaven in his arms until his very heart sings in his joy."

"Carry heaven in his arms, monsieur?"

"I mean the valse, mademoiselle. Would you valse?" His eagerness was overwhelming.

To her cheeks there came the quick flush that faded quick again, in her eyes that look of sweet yet arch surrender. "You are the dancing master, monsieur."

"Pierre, a valse!" he cried.

Then Dubarre stepped close and put his arm about her.

"With all respect, mademoiselle."

She yielded, and they began waltzing slowly.

Now Dubarre spoke. "One, two, three—one, two, three. Ah, mademoiselle, 'tis the poetry of life clothed in the joy of motion. Can you not feel, for thus 'gainst each other hearts talk, throb to throb?"

Over beside the tree Pierre began to show signs of uneasiness.

May Percy's head was bent down. Her breast moved with deep breaths, a dawning pink had stolen to her cheeks. Dubarre looked at her.

"Pardon, mademoiselle, I was wrong. 'Tis far more beautiful when the warmth of an English heart melts the mask of ice from off the face." He half whispered the words.

Pierre coughed sudden warning.

The man continued eagerly, "Then, then, mademoiselle"—

Again Pierre coughed aloud. Dubarre glanced that way. The harpist, with his head, was making violent signs of disapproval.

The hands of the dancing master fell. He stepped back suddenly and bowed. When he spoke it was in quite altered tones and very sad.

"But, mademoiselle, I forgot. There is another dance, quite another dance—the dance of the sword, where men choose honor for a partner and go down to meet death at the end. And that, mademoiselle, is the grandest dance of all."

They stood apart, looking at each other. In his face she watched struggling resolution gain hard mastery, while he saw but blushing wonder and the questioning softness of her eyes. And as they stood thus there floated over from the harp the air of an old French love song, a song of parting. But louder from the direction of the house came the hearty voice of Sir Henry Percy, calling: "May! Oh, May!"

CHAPTER V.

"MAY! Oh, May!"

Again the big voice of Sir Henry Percy bawled across the lawn. The noise of it shattered the air of the French love song and broke in rudely on the man and girl standing there silent, looking at each other. They dropped again from the cloud world of fine romance to hard earth with a jar. The wonder, the bluan, the softness all faded from the girl's face as she turned toward the house.

"Here, father; here!" she cried.

Then Sir Henry Percy, Sir John Wilmerding, Captain Thorncliffe and two strange men appeared. The old squire was plainly perplexed.

"What am I to do with these, May?" he questioned helplessly, indicating the strangers. "Another pair of beggarly Frenchmen."

Dubarre heard and bowed. "Your kindness preserved one beggar Frenchman, monsieur. He will be always grateful."

One of the newcomers, a man of about Dubarre's size and general appearance, seemed to think it was time for his appeal. With a wanderer's skill he went straight to headquarters.

"Will se kind lady help zis poh Frenchman?"

"What can I do?" asked May Percy gently.

The stranger became instantly voluble.

"My name, Jacques Fourney. My cousin, Jean." Then he indicated by signs that Jean was deaf and dumb. "We run from se 'ells France, from ze lootie Corsican. He hate us. We look for comrades, les bons comrades, who came before. We meet, zen we by so happy, but"—as he noted the fables which the servants had begun to spread for the feast—"so hungry."

May Percy's mind was already made up. "Father, no person shall go hungry from here on my birthday," she cried. "These men must stay, eat and rest tonight. Tomorrow you will give them a little money to help them on their way to find their comrades."

Then Dubarre spoke.

"Mademoiselle, may not all the beggar Frenchmen be together? I will gladly share my room with my compatriots."

At the words Jacques Fourney looked quickly at the speaker. For a moment their eyes met. Then Fourney's

"The very thing!" exclaimed Sir Henry Percy.

"Yes, a good plan—all together," echoed Sir John.

Mistress Percy turned to Dubarre. "Certainly, monsieur, if it gives you pleasure," she said. And so the matter was settled. As Dubarre led the newcomers off toward the house Captain Thorncliffe was coming to the lawn. At sight of the smaller Frenchman the soldier checked suddenly, looked in puzzled fashion, then came on, evidently wondering. The little Frenchman ducked his head and hurried after Dubarre.

The tables had been set, the feast brought on, and the guests came trooping back. May Percy, from her post at the head of the table, seated them.

"On my left, captain; Ethel, next to him; next to Ethel, James; and you, Alice, on my father's right." Then she motioned for Sir John to sit at her own right hand. "Dorothy—Sir Henry—Elizabeth."

"I'm sorry the bishop is not here to ask the blessing," quoth Sir Henry. "You should have brought him, Sir Harvey."

"His grace's gout prevented," answered Sir Harvey Johnston, "but he hopes to be over in a day or two."

Now all were in place, and the feast began. Seated on the bench behind the big tree, a dozen feet away and almost out of sight, Pierre, at the harp, made music for the diners. Dubarre had gone to show the strangers his room. Such feasts were not for renegade dancing teachers.

Gradually, at the table, appetites surrendered, and there came that time when tongues were loosed in praise of host and hostess. Captain Thorncliffe had been descanting on the virtues and might of the Percys.

"Why, even the French have a Percy!" he exclaimed as a climax.

"Indeed?" asked Sir John Wilmerding, with interest.

"And he is the worst devil in the army," added the enthusiastic captain.

"Seditious Sedition!" went the laughing cry about the table, and Sir Henry came quickly with explanations for his family.

"He is my cousin." The squire spoke very much after the same fashion as would have admitted, "My brother died of leprosy."

But Thorncliffe was honest in his admiration.

"Indeed, you should be proud of the connection, sir," he said, while May Percy clapped her hands, saying:

"Good, captain, good!"

"Tell us, is he handsome? Let us know all about him. What has he done?" came the irregular fire of questions from the rest.

"Well," said the captain meditatively, "for one thing he stole General Wellington's papers."

"A thief!" It was the horrified chorus.

"Aye, and one of the boldest," laughed the soldier. "When we started from Lisbon we were warned of this French Percy, who might pass anywhere for English."

Interested in what promised to be a good story; none noticed Dubarre, who, coming along the path from his lodge, quietly took his seat on the bench beside Pierre and began to listen.

"A traitor is this Percy?" asked Sir John.

Sir Henry answered, "His mother was my cousin, Sarah Percy."

"Daughter of Cousin John," added May Percy.

Her father nodded. "He disinherited her when she ran away with the Vicomte de St. Croix. We never saw her again."

A gentle "ah" of sympathy for the disinherited daughter of the long ago ran from girl to girl about the table.

"There was no heir. The place came to our branch," continued Sir Henry. "I believe her son is called Percy. I heard she died abroad, and rumor says the boy was taught by Englishmen."

"They did their work well," spoke up Captain Thorncliffe. "As I began to tell you, we were after Soult close. One night a man, claiming to be an escaped English prisoner, joined the ranks. He wore a heavy English beard and looked the Englishman. Also, he gave good information of Soult and led us until nightfall. At daybreak there was a cry of alarm, a stir at the outpost. In the camp three sentinels were dying. A lieutenant who tried to stop the stranger fell wounded. In the morning the escaped English prisoner was gone. [illegible] the headquarters papers." The captain finished with a smile and shrug. Not so his hearers.

"Atrocious! Assassins! Horrible! Could nothing be done?" They were the exclamations of scandalized, stay at home Englishmen, horrified at the stain put upon their country's arms abroad.

The captain listened, then continued, smiling: "Yes, in the morning came a message under flag of truce. Feeling that he had taken advantage of our hospitality, Vicomte de St. Croix, the man who once held a Spanish pass for half a day against a regiment, offered to fight any officer in the English army with sabers for the amusement of the two hosts and the English headquarters papers as the prize."

"Did any one accept?" asked May

Percy eagerly.

"The general would not allow an officer to commit suicide," was the blunt reply.

"Suicide!" questioned Wilmerding, surprised.

"Exactly," answered Thorncliffe. "No man in fair fight can stand against French Percy."

Captain Thorncliffe seems very friendly toward the renegade," sneered Sir Harvey Johnston disagreeably.

"And more of his prowess," sneered James Bate.

The captain's reputation for reckless bravery was too well founded to mind it.

"Naturally," he laughed. "I was the lieutenant."

Then Mistress Courtleigh's eyes went very big. "He beat you, captain?" she exclaimed.

"Easily. I had called to the men on outpost not to shoot, because I wanted to take the daring fellow alive, myself. 'Thanks, monsieur,' he cried, 'accept your life and a small wound from me.' Then he cut me down, jumped on my horse and rode away amid a storm of bullets, calling back to us, 'Vive l'empereur!' Naturally I feel in his debt."

"Audacious scoundrel!" roared Sir Henry, then added, "But his granddad, old Jack Percy, over again."

"But is my cousin handsome?" questioned May Percy.

"They say so, without his beard."

"And married?" she persisted.

The captain laughed again. "No, and he despises women. They adore him."

"Well, for my part," sneered James Bate, "I don't admire renegades."

"Nor I like spies," simpered Sir Harvey Johnston.

Sir John Wilmerding had become a bit excited. "Nor I, either!" he cried. "The low thief!" Then he added viciously, "I'd love to have him at my sword's point, this French Percy."

At that Gaston Dubarre and Pierre, seated on the bench behind the tree, looked at each other. "A shallow strutter, Pierre," said the dancing master. And between two touches on the harp strings his man nodded a smiling "yes."

Over at the table May Percy and Ethel Courtleigh were talking low. "I'd like to meet my cousin," said Mistress Percy.

Captain Thorncliffe, still chuckling to himself over Sir John Wilmerding's last speech, heard her.

"You may get, young lady," he cried, "'Tis said to be French Percy's boast that some day he will come to England and stop at his mother's home. They say he promised her to do it." Sir Henry Percy rose quickly then.

"Tush, Tush!" he exclaimed irritably. "Enough of this. We should be merry, not discuss French dogs, for to me this is an especial time of joy."

"To be sure, to be sure," cried Thorncliffe, eager to make amends, "for isn't it the seventeenth birthday of one of the fairest maids in all England?"

"Right, captain, but my joy goes deeper. This is not only my daughter's birthday, but today sees my fondest hopes well on the road to be realized."

Sir John Wilmerding glanced at May Percy, then smiled a quick smile of joyful anticipation. At her father's words the girl's eyes flashed fierce rebellion; then, as she looked at him standing there so happy, became as quick miserably resigned. With mastodonic playfulness Sir Henry continued:

"It's a pretty secret, and it is my pleasure, friends and neighbors, to tell you of it, but can you guess this little romance?" He paused.

About the table were sly winks and laughs and gestures toward Mistress Percy and Sir John. A dozen feet away and partly screened behind a tree a man stood at strained attention, watching a girl's face and listening for every word.

Again Sir Henry took up his speech. "It all goes back to the time when Sir Elmer Wilmerding and I were young men, friends, closer than brothers. And in those days we planned a romance. He had a son, young John Wilmerding, and I a daughter."

Now at the tree Pierre stopped playing and rose quickly to lay a sympathetic hand upon his comrade's shoulder. That comrade paid no attention—only with his eyes he sought that other pair of eyes, equally miserable, and watched, answering line for line every mark of pain on a girl's white face. And the gay tittering about the table was the laughing accompaniment for breaking hearts. The squire was now in a hurry to finish.

"We fixed our hopes on these children. I have watched John Wilmerding grow, and, whether a playing boy, a youth or a man, he has held my respect, and today I am very happy."

There was deep silence among the guests, the silence of stilled expectation. Beside the tree Dubarre bent forward, eager, intent, fearful, a prisoner awaiting the certain death sentence.

"It is with great joy"—Sir Henry spoke now very slowly—"that I announce the betrothal of my daughter, Mistress May Percy, to Sir John Wilmerding."

He stopped, beaming over all. Now rang out the "bravos" and the lively buzz of congratulation. Over by the big tree a man turned bitterly aside. "Mon Dieu, and they call that a romance!" he said. The prisoner had got his sentence.

At the table, her strained smile making mock of her own miserable eyes, a girl sat waiting for the hum of congratulation to dimmer down. Sir Henry raised his glass.

"And now to the health of these young doves. Their health, friends, their health!" he cried. It was drunk standing, and when they sat down Captain Thorncliffe remained on his feet for a speech.

GROWING CHILDREN

Access to Millions of Clanton

Perhaps the most important principal involved in the care of a child is proper nourishment.

How many delicate children do we meet on our streets with chests and thin little legs and arms. It is very plain to be seen that rapid growth takes all their strength and their little bodies are not receiving sufficient nourishment to make them well, strong and robust.

We want to say to the parents of all such children in Clanton that our delicious cod liver and iron preparation, Vinol, will build up delicate children, fill out hollow cheeks and make them strong, robust and rosy. Vinol makes new vitality, sound flesh and muscle tissue and pure, rich, red blood, and children love it. This is because Vinol is a delicious tasting cod liver preparation without oil, made by a scientific, extractive and concentrating process from fresh cods' liver, thus combining with peptonate of iron all the medicinal, healing, body-building elements of cod liver oil, but no oil.

As a body builder and strength creator for old people, delicate children, weak, run down persons, after sickness, and for chronic coughs, colds, bronchitis, and all throat and lung troubles, Vinol is unexcelled. Try Vinol on our offer to return money if it fails to give satisfaction. Upchurch Drug Co., Clanton, Ala.

I will keep all the above appointments, with the exception of the last ten days at Clanton, which the law does not require of me.

L. B. POUNDS, Tax Assessor.

You can't be healthy if you have a weak, unhealthy, tired out stomach. Neither can you feel good if by some little irregularity in eating you have caused the stomach to get out of order. These little stomach troubles are signs of indigestion, which may and very often does turn into a very bad case of dyspepsia. Don't allow this to go on a single day without doing something to overcome it. Take some good reasonable and safe digestant like KODOL for dyspepsia. KODOL is the best remedy known today for heartburn, belching and all troubles arising from a disordered digestion. It is pleasant to take and affords relief promptly. Sold by Upchurch Drug co.

Mountain Creek.

Editor Banner—Please allow me space in your paper to congratulate Miss Edna Gaylor, Hattiesburg, Miss., for the piece she wrote in the Banner. Miss Bessie Gaylor and Mr. Hugh Morehead were quietly married on Saturday in Hattiesburg, Miss. Miss Bessie was loved by everyone and was a very popular young lady; her home was in Mountain Creek.

Miss Nellie Gray will take a pleasure trip to Montgomery this week. J. W. G. Kicker is building a large store at this place.

Joel Dennis has a new shoe shop shop at this place; call around to see him. Mountain Creek is rejoiced because Birmingham is prohibition; hope to see Montgomery the same way. A SUBSCRIBER.

WINTERING BEES.

Colonies in Straw in an Open Shed.

On the south side of the new building at the experiment station and Agricultural college is a shed 16 feet wide and 100 feet long. The north end of the length of it is a room with a tight floor and filled up with two skeleton walls of 2 by 4 so that some forty inches of loose straw may be wrapped around the hives as nearly normal conditions as possible, with the entrances open to the outside, permitting the bees to fly at will.

There are doors in the gable roof at each end and storage room for empty hives and supplies comes when not in use during the honey harvest.

The bees were put in the first two winters prior to the completion of this new house experimental colonies were carried on in outdoor winter packing a number of colonies in a row under one roof. The experience during the last two years has not only modified by the indoor wintering with packing only above the frames, but also by packing colonies together in an open shed against the south side of the house. (See the accompanying illustration.)

Outdoor wintering is usually accomplished in chaff hives, and one great objection is the expensiveness of these hives. Otherwise, since it is the most natural condition for bees, this method is highly recommended for inexperienced beekeepers. The feature of these hives is a double wall with from four to eight inches of space between the walls on all sides, including the bottom, filled with some nonconductor of heat like straw, chaff, paper or leaves. The effect of this packing is to retain the heat and at the same time permit the moisture produced by the bees to pass off.

Further permit moisture to escape a piece of carriage cloth quilt used in winter is removed and a canvas quilt is placed over the frames. Above this three papers, a piece of old quilting or a cheese tray may be used to retain the heat. Then above this material to retain the heat there should be an open space with free ventilation, accomplished by auger holes through the gable ends of the roof. The roof and hive should be thoroughly painted, the hive placed several inches from the ground to prevent freezing and dampness and the attendant soaking up moisture. The entrance formed by a small passageway through the packing is the usual place is contracted to a foot or so for the winter. There will be in most instances no trouble in wintering bees so packed if they are strong in numbers and with plenty of stores.—Montana Experimental Station.

Dried Leaves Useful.

Piles of dried leaves should be saved for bedding and to bank up cellars and pits, suggests American Farmer. Bog hay is also good for this purpose. In some localities large quantities of brook hay and bog hay have formerly not been considered worth cutting for stock, but now that work horses are pressing some farmers could afford to cut this grass for bedding purposes. Simply mow it, leave it lie a day or two, then turn the swaths, and let it dry it will be cured well enough for these purposes.

An Osage Hedge.

An Osage hedge if trimmed up five or six feet may be converted into a first class hog and cattle tight fence by stretching about six barbed wires, writes a farmer in Iowa Homestead. In a year or two when the branches grow together over the wire it makes an impassable barrier to live stock's exit or entrance.

KING CORN.

Results of Improvement in Breeding and Cultivation.

In commenting on the National Corn exposition recently held at Chicago, Orange Judd Farmer says:

There were about 5,000 exhibits of corn on display. Taking the entire exhibit into consideration, the corn on the tables was probably the best ever shown at any exhibition. This is most remarkable, considering the unfavorable conditions which prevailed through the growing season. It would not be possible to have anything like corn of the high quality shown were it not for the great improvement in breeding and cultivation of late. Pure bred varieties mature earlier and resist unfavorable weather conditions to a greater extent than the inferior corn grown a few years ago. In the class open to the world the showing was wonderful. Probably a third of the entire exhibit was in this lot.

Illinois Exhibit.

The Illinois exhibit, as would naturally be expected, was very complete in white and yellow classes. Undoubtedly, however, the yellow varieties predominated, the majority of them being of the Reid type. This is a remarkably uniform variety and of high scoring quality. The white samples were just about as numerous, and many of them were of very excellent character, but as show corn they did not compare quite as well as yellow corn.

Calico and Red Varieties.

Outside of the white and yellow varieties shown by Iowa exhibitors there was an exceedingly fine showing of calico and red corn. In the cattle feeding states these varieties seem to be exceedingly popular.

CORN STORAGE.

Germination Tests With Corn Stored in Different Ways.

The relation of a perfect stand to increased crop yields has been so effectually demonstrated that the best method of storing seed grain becomes a matter of vital interest to all corn growers. A test was made last year to determine what the effect of storing corn in a dry room, on racks in the barn, in the warming oven of a stove and in a cornerib would have on the germinating powers of the seed the following spring.

The per cent of germination was lowest with the corn stored in the crib, as would naturally be expected, as the seed was exposed to the widely varying temperatures which prevailed during the winter season. The germination was practically the same with the samples stored in a dry room and on racks in a barn, though these methods of storing had but little advantage over the use of the warming oven. Considerable difference was witnessed, however, in the strength of the germinations from corn kept in the several ways indicated. The grain from the corn stored in the crib showed the least vigor of germination, the best results being obtained from the corn stored on the racks in the barn, followed quite closely by that stored in a dry room. The corn stored in the warming oven germinated fairly well in all except two instances. In one the germination was remarkably low, due either to a poor ear or to the fact that the corn may have been overheated at some time.

The matter of the storage of seed after it has been carefully bred and selected is therefore one which should receive the careful attention of every farmer.—Andrew M. Soule, Virginia.

Western Butter in Texas.

Carloads of imported butter come to Texas every week from the high priced lands of Illinois, Kansas and Iowa. When will the cotton farmer and his children learn that the markets for good butter in this section demand butter and cream at such high prices that cotton growing is put to shame? It is merely a matter of knowledge and skill.—Farm and Ranch.

A Variety of Feed.

Hens to feel well and to lay must have a variety of feed, and they must have it clean. The idea of shutting poultry up in small quarters and scattering the feed around in dirty places, then expecting good results, is absurd, but how many poultry yards are found in just such condition!—Farm Press.

Good Quarters For the Hogs.

Under all circumstances, regardless of climate, whether a man is breeding pure bred stock or grades, hogs should have sleeping places that are dry and warm, providing protection against storms and damp, chilly weather.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson VII.—Fourth Quarter, For Nov. 17, 1907.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of Lesson, Judg. vii, 9-22—Memory Verses, 17, 18—Golden Text, Dan. iii, 22—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1907, by American Press Association.]

In Paul's sermon at Antioch, in Pisidia, he summarizes the four books of Exodus, Numbers, Joshua and Judges in about as many sentences (Acts xiii, 17-20), giving an epitome of Judges in these words: "And after that He gave unto them judges about the space of 450 years until Samuel the prophet."

Our lessons since the first of June have covered about fifty years of history, and now we are to have two lessons out of 450 years, with a temperance lesson between, but as our aim is to know God as we see Him working the period of time covered by the lesson or lessons is not of primary importance. Throughout the whole Bible these two facts seem always prominent, the patience and love of God and the rebellion and sin of man. In this book of Judges these are very prominent, an oft repeated sentence being "The children of Israel did evil in the sight of the Lord" (ii, 11; iii, 7; iv, 1; vi, 1; x, 6; xiii, 1). A characteristic sentence is, "They ceased not from their own doings, nor from their stubborn way" (ii, 19), and the last section of the book begins and ends with "There was no king in Israel; every man did that which was right in his own eyes" (xvii, 6; xxi, 25). On the other hand, we read that the Lord reasoned with them, saying: "I said I will never break My covenant with you, and ye shall make no league with the inhabitants of this land; ye shall throw down their altars, but ye have not obeyed My voice. Why have ye done this?" "Nevertheless the Lord raised up judges, * * * and when the Lord raised them up judges then the Lord was with the judge and delivered them out of the hand of their enemies."

After several oppressions and deliverances the lesson of today finds them in the hands of the Midianites, greatly impoverished and sorely oppressed, crying unto the Lord in their distress (vi, 6). A man named Gideon, of the tribe of Manasseh, while secretly threshing some wheat, hoping to save it from the Midianites, seems to have had some thoughts of what he would like to do to Midian. The Lord, whose eyes are everywhere looking for such as have eyes and hearts for Him, called upon him and greeted him thus: "The Lord is with thee, thou mighty man of valor. * * * Go in this thy might and thou shalt save Israel from the hand of the Midianites. Have not I sent thee? * * * Surely I will be with thee" (vi, 11-16; II Chron. xvi, 9; Ezek. xi, 5). Gideon was not quite as brave as his thoughts and pleaded his unworthiness, but was encouraged by some signs from the Lord, and vi, 34, says, "The Spirit of the Lord came upon (or clothed Himself with) Gideon, and he blew a trumpet, and Abi-ezer was gathered after him." The whole story of Gideon's offering, the overthrow of his father's altar to Baal, the fleece and the dew, and the sifting of an army of 32,000 down to 300, is most fascinating, and it is to be hoped that all teachers will find some time for each incident. One of our great weaknesses is to think that nothing can be accomplished without a lot of people or a lot of money or a lot of material. We are slow to learn that the power and wisdom and might and wealth of man may be a hindrance rather than a help to the Lord and that He takes the foolish and the weak and the base and the things which are not, to bring to naught things that are, that no flesh should glory in His presence (I Cor. i, 27-29). A victory won by 32,000 might tempt Israel to say, "Mine own hand hath saved me" and thus lead them to boast against God (vii, 2). First the fearful ones are sent home, and 22,000 return. Then the 10,000 are further sifted by the way they take a drink of water, and only 300 zealous, self renouncing people are left. Let the question search us, Where would I come in? Luke xiv, 33, seems to fit here.

See how wholly this victory is of the Lord. Where is there a particle of human wisdom or so called common sense in what Gideon does? Three companies of 100 men each, in one hand of each man a trumpet and in the other an earthen vessel containing a torch, and their marching orders, "Look on me and do likewise." "As I do, so shall ye do" (verses 16-18). They evidently spread themselves out about the hosts of the Midianites, and at the signal from Gideon each man blew his trumpet, raised his torch, having broken his vessel, and shouted, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon!" (19-23.) The enemy began to kill one another, and the rest was easy. A sentence that catches my eye and reaches my heart is in verse 21, "They stood every man in his place," reminding us of Mark xiii, 34, "To every man his work," and I Cor. xii, 11, "The Spirit dividing to every man severally as He will." Our Gideon (bruiser), the great bruiser of the enemy (Gen. iii, 15; Rom. xvi, 20), says to each of His redeemed ones, "Go in this thy might; I have sent thee; I will be with thee." "Let your light shine." "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me (Matt. xxviii, 18-20; v, 16; John xx, 21; Acts i, 8). The trumpet suggests a clear testimony as to the atonement, and the torch a consistent life. In II Cor. iv, 7, we are reminded that we have this treasure in earthen vessels that the excellency of the power may be of God and not of us.

STATE PAWNSHOPS.

French Rate Is 7 Per Cent—Sometimes No Interest Is Charged.

"With some of the stability or institutions of the abandoned regret of our want of pawnshops does the Parisian perform his journey to the money lender. Far from feeling, after the door has closed behind him, that he is in the country of the enemy, the Frenchman can have his patriotic order of the day, for over the pawnshop door the Minister of France instead of the gilded balls, and the guard at the door is a liveried, white gloved republican guard. The customary whispering as the borrower exchanges goods for cash is unknown. Borrowing is a business transaction with the government.

"It is not out of appreciation of these conditions, of course, that 7,000 people daily visit the municipal pawnshops, but their business trip includes a knowledge of the fact that whatever profits will accrue to the establishments will finally go back to the people.

"There is no blighting, says a writer in the Philadelphia Record. On pawnshop row—little of the value of the object can be secured; on the other principle two-thirds. The interest is 7 per cent per annum. Should a borrower be in the unfortunate position of having paid interest for many years without being able to redeem the article the authorities will return it. When interest has not been paid the object in question goes to the auction, and then the righteousness of Paris pawnbroking is decidedly in evidence, for after the sale has been consummated and the original loan and interest are deducted from the money secured by the sale the surplus goes to the borrower. Should the money remain unclaimed it is turned over to the Paris hospitals, and, curiously enough, these hospitals profit to the extent of 100,000 francs a year.

"What are the inside study of French pawnbroking laws it is easily seen that the first object served by these laws is to protect people who want immediate money advantages. France (and we may say France, for municipal pawnbroking is to be found in every corner of the country) cares little that many transactions are carried on at a loss. In the year of some 2,000,000 pawned articles in Paris 1,000,000 were effected at a loss, since no auction will bring a complete recompense on small objects. Of course this is offset by the return from loans on the other million articles, but should there be a deficiency the municipality has no hesitation in going down in its pockets and thus has an indirect mode of making the well to do to support the needy. Since no country has raised a cry against charity, this, as one form of it, can be passed without criticism. The rate is money is lost on all loans under 20 francs.

"The capital of the pawnshops consists of legacies, gifts and subventions of the state department or the communes. Occasionally, as at Grenoble and Montpellier, the establishments are so well endowed that no interest is charged. Paris, for no unfathomable reasons, does the largest pawnbroking business on the continent, 34,000,000 francs being the average yearly pledges and 30,000,000 francs redeemed. The total revenue is 4,000,000 francs, the expense of management 1,500,000 francs, the interest on capital about 1,500,000 francs and the net profits 150,000 francs.

The Brute.

"Such an angel of a hat," chirped the vain woman as she twirled before the mirror. "Yellow and white. What does it remind you of, my dear?"

The big man in the embroidered slippers looked up from his paper.

"Yellow and white?" he repeated. "Well, now, on the level, it reminds me of a fried egg."—Chicago News.

ALWAYS WAS SICK.

When a man says he always was sick—troubled with a cough that lasted all winter—what would you think if he should say—he never was sick since using Ballard's Horehound syrup. Such a man exists.

Mr. J. C. Clark, Denver, Colorado, writes: "For years I was troubled with a severe cough that would last all winter. This cough left me in a miserable condition. I tried Ballard's Horehound Syrup and have not had a sick day since. That's what it did for me." Sold by Upchurch Drug Co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thorsby.

CAISSON WORK.

How Foundations of Great Steel Structures Are Built.

The foundations for the great steel structures are built by means of caissons in which the men can work under a great pressure of air. It is a very interesting sight to watch them, and the best of it is that any one may see them at close range from the sidewalk. The caisson is a huge steel cylinder open at the bottom and just large enough to permit a man to work. The workman climbs down a ladder in this tube and digs away the earth at the bottom. As the earth is taken away the steel tube is gradually lowered. The earth is taken out by a bucket, which is lowered and raised by a tall derrick at one side. As the caisson sinks, air is pumped into the compartment containing the man. This is to force back any water or dirt that might fill the hole from the outside as fast as the workman removes it from within. The pressure of this air is often so great that a man can work but an hour or so at a time. At the top of the caisson is a steel cylinder with an air tight door at either end, which serves as a kind of vestibule to the tube below.

When one of the caisson workers starts to go to work he opens the door or lid at the top and climbs in, when the opening is once more tightly closed. This door or lid is air tight. After the opening to the outer air has been closed the workman opens the door at the bottom of this steel compartment and lets in compressed air from the caisson below. It takes a few minutes to become accustomed to breathing this atmosphere, for the heavy air makes the head ring. As soon as the workman can do so he climbs down into the tunnel below, closing the lower door of the steel antechamber as he does so. All this must be done in the dark. If the workman wishes to signal the outer world he may do so by striking the steel sides of his narrow prison with his shovel. He usually signals in this way when the bucket is to be raised or lowered.—Frances Arnold Collins in St. Nicholas.

DINING IN WALL STREET.

What Lunch Hour Means to New York's Financial District.

When one descends upon Wall street, either from the Broadway slope of Trinity church or from the Nassau street hill, at noontime any week day the air is fraught with many conflicting odors of the kitchen. From over the roars of the clamoring curb folk way down in the valley of Broad street there arises from a score of confection and "handouts" a decided smell of the stewpot blended with the ever present onion. From the eaves of the New York Stock Exchange come the more pretentious fragrance of spiced meats and strong coffee. From the basement and attic alike, from cloud tickler and antiquated frame house as well, come all sorts of fuming evidences that the men of affairs are eating. To realize what this luncheon hour means to Wall street one must stop to think of the thousands of persons who are in that small district of the city at this particular part of the day. Hundreds of restaurants meet the rush with their doors flung wide, and their keepers have grown rich upon nickels and dimes that fall into their tills like a mighty ratapian during those brief hours of midday. Men have grown rich and retired to palatial mansions in the suburbs selling cup custards and "sinkers" to millionaires, stenographers, clerks and bankers alike during the busy hour or two at most. Thousands of pounds of meat, countless oysters and clams, barrels of gravy, unaccountable gallons of coffee and tea and tons of bread are consumed every day in a very brief period of time, and here, of all other places, the foreigner has found justification for his criticism of Americans for fast eating.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

How to Cure a Cold.

Be as careful as you can you will occasionally take cold, and when you do, get a medicine of known reliability, one that has an established reputation and that is certain to effect a quick cure. Such a medicine is Chamberlin's Cough Remedy. It has gained a world wide reputation by its remarkable cures of this most common ailment, and can always be depended upon. It acts on nature's plan; relieves the lungs, aids expectoration, opens the secretions and aids nature in restoring the system to a healthy condition. During the many years in which it has been in general use we have yet to learn of a single case of cold or attack of the grip having resulted in pneumonia when this remedy was used, which shows conclusively that it is a certain preventive of that dangerous disease. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. For sale by Upchurch Drug co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thorsby.

Lawley.

Editor Banner:—If you will allow me room I again come to the Banner to say a few words to the boys.

Now, boys, if I step on your toes please don't think hard of me. I want to say a few words about drinking. It is a hard thing for a man here or enter to see just how one another drink. Now, boys, I have had the trial of this and if you only knew how my heart did ache, you would never drink any more. Just think how it breaks a girl's heart to see her brother go to ruin on whiskey. I think it is time for the fathers of this community to go to work and get some of these blind tigers and wild cats out of these hollows. It looks like to me that they are just careless and don't care. I know to a certain knowledge that there was enough wild cat whiskey sold in a hollow Saturday night to be the ruin of twenty-five boys. Now, boys, I saw some of this wild cat myself, and that was not all, I found out just where it came from. Fathers, what does this mean? Are you going to let your boys grow up in this, and then expect them to marry some nice girl. Boys, try and make this community a bright one, for it has plenty of nice girls, and why can't you all be just the same. Fathers are you going to sit here and let negroes sell whiskey to your boys that are under age. I have thought there was enough brave men around Sheults to get rid of some of these wild cats, and I think it is time for them to hustle. Boys, here is a little verse of a song. Take its advice.

"One night I left home, dear mother was sick with fever and torture and pain, she says my dear boy, take this motto, I may never give it again, and when I returned home from a night's world of fun, I found that dear mother was dead, 'Twas then the cold chills ran through my body, when I thought of the last words she said, 'Be at home soon to night, my dear boy; don't spend all your money in gamble and drink; there are other things you can enjoy. Take this motto I give.' 'Twas a mother's advice, 'Be at home soon to-night, my dear boy."

Boys, this is one piece of good advice. There is no friend like your mother, treat her right and live right so as to make her life happy, don't do things to shorten her days, for when she is gone you will never get another mother mother.

Well, Mr. Editor, I think I have said enough on this question, and hope that this will do some good. Wishing the Banner success and long may it wave.

PAPA'S GIRL.

A Protest.

The brave ship was wallowing in the waves that threatened to engulf her at any moment. Hastily the captain ordered a box of rockets and flares brought to the rail and with his own hands ignited a number of them, in the hope that they would be seen and the passengers and crew rescued. Mid the rockets' red glare a tall, thin, austere individual found his way with difficulty to the rail and spoke to the captain.

"Captain," said he, "I must protest against this daredevilishness. We are now facing death. This is no time for a celebration."—Success Magazine.

It Depended.

English John and Pat were two friendly workmen, who were constantly tilting, each one trying to outwit the other.

"Are you good at measurement?" asked John.

"I am that," said Pat quickly.

"Then could you tell me how many shirts I could get out of a yard," asked John.

"Sure," said Pat, "it depends on whose yard you get into."

The Beginning of Football.

The first reference to what may possibly be the game of football is to be found in a proclamation of Edward II., 1314, when the people were forbidden "to hustle over large balls." The present name was first used in a statute of Edward III., 1347, when "football" in London streets was declared illegal.—London Reader.

Big Demand for the Cooper Remedies at Florence Causes Much Comment

For the past several weeks the famous Cooper Remedies have been selling in quantities that far surpass anything ever introduced here. Florence Drug Store, the local agent, says they have never before handled remedies that proved to be so popular. There seems to be no abatement to the interest displayed by local people in the work of Mr. Cooper in Chicago, the following account of which is from the Journal of that city:

During the past two weeks hundreds of voluntary testimonials have been given at Cooper's headquarters, The Public Drug Company, 150 State street, on the efficiency of the Cooper preparations for deafness, stomach complaints, rheumatism, and as a general spring tonic.

Among the recent callers was Mrs. Emma Stanley, living at 713 Washington Boulevard. She told her story in a most convincing manner, and many persons who stood around her, indorsed all she had to say in praise of the Cooper remedies. She said:

"Perhaps I have had the most complicated case that Mr. Cooper has had to deal with. I was troubled with both deafness and stomach complaints. I don't know that one thing had anything to do with the other, but I do know that I tried many patent medicine preparations without result. I was so deaf that I could not hear a clock tick and my stomach was in such wretched shape that I could not enjoy a meal that I ate.

"I was very nervous and could hardly sleep. I had a roaring noise in my ears and dancing spots before my eyes. I felt very bad and weak.

"One day I heard about the Cooper medicine and decided to try it. I have just started on my fourth bottle and the improvement in my case has been really wonderful. My nerves have [illegible] my hearing is much [illegible] I feel like a new [illegible]

"I cannot say too [illegible] wonderful remedies, [illegible] made me well again [illegible] now enjoy life like I [illegible] I was sick."

Among the many [illegible] day was Mr. George P. [illegible] Center street, who had [illegible] fever from stomach [illegible] many years. He said:

"I suffered several [illegible] indigestion and [illegible] At times I was very [illegible] ous, had dizzy spells, [illegible] felt tired and miserable [illegible] the time. Sleep at night [illegible] no strength and I arose [illegible] in the morning. My [illegible] also impaired; could [illegible] could eat a good meal, [illegible] the time I had no desire [illegible]

"One day I saw the [illegible] ment of Cooper and [illegible] edies. I went at once [illegible] medicine, and after I had [illegible] few doses I was relieved [illegible] mous tapeworm. [illegible] what caused my [illegible] stomach feels easy now, [illegible] weight had been restored, [illegible] health improved rapidly, [illegible] a good appetite and was [illegible] restored in strength.

"I am very thankful [illegible] for all that has made [illegible] for me, and I heartily [illegible] it to all persons who [illegible] and are probably troubled [illegible]

"It has done all that [illegible] claimed for it in my case, [illegible] helped me where all other [illegible] failed."

Hundreds of people are coming to see Mr. Cooper [illegible] same story of restored [illegible] strength and happiness, [illegible] ly proves that all that [illegible] said and written about [illegible] is undoubtedly true.

SOUP AT $35 A PLATE.

Sterlet Roe at $10 a Head and Peanut Bud Jelly at $250.

Public interest has recently been excited by a remarkable dinner party given in London at which twenty-four people sat down and which cost $15,000. Some high class chefs who know the deepest mysteries of their business are inclined to say that this was really nothing after all.

The most expensive soup that can be served is Chinese bird's nest soup, which can hardly be done at less than $35 for a moderate plate of it for each guest.

When the fish course is reached in the menu the most expensive item possible is the newest cavalre, made from sterlet roe and not from common sturgeon. There are only one or two London restaurants at which this rare delicacy may be obtained, and the charge for it is $10 per head.

Mullet roe, another rare dish, costs more than its weight in silver, while those who do not wish to advance quite to this point in expenditure might be satisfied with a more frequently served dish, Caribbean pompano, which has to be brought to London on ice from Galveston or Pensacola and which costs $5 to $10 a pound.

A game pie, made of the little birds called ruffs—small things with long legs and a ruff of feathers behind their necks, belonging to the sandpiper family—is about the most expensive thing possible in this direction and cannot be done for less than $50 to $75, while if the ruffs are unusually scarce the charge for the pie may easily run up to $100.

Dunstable larks come next. They are fairly common on the tables of epicures, but it costs quite $7.50 to serve a single dish of them.

There are not so many possibilities for gigantic expenditure when the joints come on the table, giraffe steak or bison ribs at anything from $2.50 to $5 a head being about the best.

As for sweets, the thoughts of a millionaire host who wanted to beat the record and knew his business would naturally fly to a jelly of peanut buds and ginger, which would be sent to him in little pots from China at a charge of $250 a pot, one tablespoonful in each.

Forced strawberries in the middle of winter are most expensive to buy and may run to anything from $5 to $25 a head.

A great delicacy at one time was the double cocoanut, or coco-de-mer, which is only grown on two small islands of the Seychelles and which was last sold at $300. It is, however, so extremely rare now that an enactment has been passed forbidding its exportation under any circumstances.—London Stray Stories.

Pat's Dram.

A physician not long ago [illegible] to see an Irishman and [illegible] directions told him to [illegible] of whisky three times a [illegible] so later he made another [illegible] found the man, while not [illegible] denisbly drunk.

"How did this happen?" [illegible] cian demanded of Pat's [illegible] hovering about solicitously.

"Sure, dochter, an' 'tis [illegible] ordered an' no more that [illegible] protested.

"I said one ounce of [illegible] times a day. That could [illegible] drunk," the physician said, "[illegible] had much more than that."

"Nivur a drop more, [illegible] she declared. "Sure, [illegible] know just how much an [illegible] Oi wint to the drug store [illegible] an' the lad—he's a broth [illegible] told me that an ounce [illegible] drams, an' Pat has had [illegible] an' no more."—London Tit-Bits.

Beauty of Inequality.

The beauty as well as the [illegible] of the universe requires [illegible] Equal lines, smooth surfaces [illegible] nal plains have no beauty. [illegible] have hill and dale, mountain [illegible] ley, sea and land, suns of [illegible] tudes, worlds of all sizes [illegible] dimensions and persons of [illegible] divers casts and colors is [illegible] beautiful and happy world. [illegible] have sexes, conditions and [illegible] stances—empires, nations and [illegible] —diversities in person, mind, [illegible] in order to the communication [illegible] ception of happiness; hence [illegible] merous and various wants and [illegible] incentives to action, but [illegible] pleasure, both simple and [illegible] physical, intellectual and moral.—Alexander Campbell.

The Jewel of Forgiveness.

Nothing is more moving to [illegible] the spectacle of reconciliation [illegible] weaknesses are thus indulged [illegible] are not too costly, being [illegible] pay for the hour of forgiveness [illegible] the archangel who has never [illegible] has reason to envy the man who [illegible] does it. When thou forgivest [illegible] man who has pierced thy heart [illegible] to thee in the relation of the [illegible] that perforates the shell of the [illegible] which straightway closes [illegible] with a pearl.—Richter.

Importance of the Eye.

One fact is certain—that [illegible] ture the engineer, using the [illegible] its widest sense, will become [illegible] ingly more and more [illegible] social progress of the world [illegible] that on his labors and [illegible] more than on that of any [illegible] of society will depend the [illegible] physical well being of [illegible]

There is a number of people who are under an erroneous impression. They think that they never control enough money to start a bank account. In this they are mistaken. We solicit small accounts as well as large. And we handle the business of both with our best care. We believe that you ought to have a bank account, and we offer you our services

CLANTON, ALA.

Many people seem to think that unless they can open a Savings Account with not less than $50.00 or $100.00, it is not worth the while to begin. This is not a correct position to take. If a person cannot open an account with more than $1.00, and really desires to get some money ahead, then he should begin with even $1.00. The first dollar saved and put in bank, is the initial step on the way to prosperity. "Great oaks from little acorns grow." As a rule, the person who "Puts off" the opening of a Savings Account until he has a large amount to deposit, is not likely to ever have a bank account. We solicit your account.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Briarfield.

It has been some time since this district has had a write-up and I think it is time to wake up and let them hear from us. Correspondence seems to be scarce from this district, however, we have one consultation, that is, we are a considerable distance ahead of our neighbor city Many things have happened since the last write-up and I will endeavor to give you a few of them.

It is gratifying to notice the way our city folks are waking up, and the way they are handling things demonstrates that they now mean business. We have been holding down the back seat too long for our own good and it is high time we were getting up in front. Mrs. Lewis Campbell of Selma was a pleasant visitor to our city the past week. Miss Estell Fanchier, one o' Greyridge's popular young ladies was in town Friday. Miss Mary Schofield visited friends in Montevallo several days the past week. Must be something very attractive in that city. A boy came to the home of V. L. Hubbard and wife Sunday morning, Nov. 10th. Miss ... calls to see us often. Mrs. J. R. Gardner, wife of one of our prominent merchants, visited Selma the past week. Nothing doing in the cotton line. It seems that farmers will have to do as they have planned, (hold their cotton) as our merchants state impossible to get the dough to buy cotton; everything quiet. Mr. J. R. Smith, Jr., of Birmingham arrived in the city Monday morning. Mr. Rempse Wilson and Mr. Fanchier spent a few hours with the Chilton ladies Sunday. V. L. H.

Editor Banner—Please allow me a small space in your paper to say a few words in reply to Mr. Sam R. Billingsley. He said that every man that voted non-prohibition meant crime and criminal, insanity and anything that was degrading. Say, Mr. Billingsley, there may be a few men that have as much brain as you, and I don't think the Editor would print a letter from an insane person. Well Mr. Billingsley says that he thinks everybody knows enough about all of this without him writing any more; maybe someone knows nearly as much as you, if I don't. Well, Mr. Billingsley, hasn't everybody got a right to spend their money as they please? I am in favor of a free and independent government, but it don't seem that you and some others are, by trying to vote their privileges away from them.

Editor Banner—Will you allow me space for a few words. The health of this place is good.

Mr. Marion Thompson was a visitor of Mr. Carl Lawrence, Sunday. Mr. J. E. Connor and family visited Mrs. Lawrence, Sunday.

We are having white frosts these mornings. Forepaugh & Sells' show was in town yesterday, with all kinds of animals. We have a preacher moving in this morning; we welcome all good people.

Little Miss Orpha Lawrence was given a nice boquet of flowers while on her way to school, which she placed on her papa's and sister's grave. Mr. L. R. Connor visited his sister, Mrs. M. F. Lawrence, Sunday. I think some of the people down about Friendship might write more. M. F. L.

Maplesville.

On Nov. 10th, Mr. J. W. Mitchell of Maplesville led to the marriage altar Miss Fannie Cabb at the residence of the bride's parents near Jemison. Several couples from Maplesville accompanied the groom and witnessed the nuptials, and all went "as merry as a marriage bell." Mr. Mitchell is a merchant of Maplesville, a man of fine character and sterling worth, admired by his many friends for those traits that constitute noble manhood. He is superintendent of the Baptist Sunday school, and is ever ready to lend a helping hand to a worthy cause. Mrs. Mitchell is a charming and attractive woman and we extend her a most cordial welcome to [illegible]. Evergreen.

The health in our community is busily engaged for the past week making syrup, and are not yet through. Think they are contemplating on living sweet next year.

Everybody is almost done gathering and are storing their cotton away for 15 cents. The soil in this community seems to be very productive, when the farmers raise gourds measuring 26 inches in length and 41 inches in circumference. School is progressing nicely with large attendence. Everybody seems to be interested in the cause of education and upbuilding of their coutry. Have good Sunday school with large attendance and preaching every third Sunday.

25 PERSONS INJURED

Natural Gas Explosion at Fittsburg, Pa.

TWO ARE FATALLY HURT

When Match Was Struck to Light the Kitchen Fire, Terrific Explosion Followed—Two Persons Blown Through Windows—Dwelling Shattered.

Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 15.—About twenty-five persons wer einjured Friday, two fatally, and a dwelling house was torn to pieces, when an explosion of natural gas occurred in a house located at No. 103 Elm street, this city. In the fire which followed two firemen were severely burned.

Fatally injured are:

Mrs. Sarah H. Grossman, blown through roof.

Jacob Bergerman, blown through roof.

Seriously injured: Three members of the Grossman family; three members of the Moidel fatly, which also occupied the house, and Theo Buimer, a guest of the Grossman's.

About fourteen other persons in the neighborhood received injuries.

Windows in their houses were shattered by the concussion and plaster fell upon them.

Apparently gas had been leaking in a kitchen stove all night. Early Friday morning when a match was struck to light the stove, there was a terrific explosion. The house was torn to pieces. The roof was blown high in the air, and the front and rear of the dwelling collapsed.

Mrs. Grossman and Jacob Bergerman, it is believed, apparently received the full force of the explosion, both being blown from their beds through the roof.

ALABAMA LEGISLATURE.

Some Doubts as to Passage of Constitutional Prohibition.

Montgomery, Ala., Nov. 15.—The house and senate were slow in getting to work, and passed few bills.

The former endorsed the bills for regulation of railroads, fixing penalties of the railroad commission and providing for inspection of books of corporations in contests. The senate passed a measure for statements of standards in cotton seed meal, and spent the rest of the day in speeching on the maximum rate bill.

The state corporation measure passed by the house was referred to the senate, and a public hearing will be had on it by the committee.

It still very likely has a chance. There is enough.

WHITE SLAVE TRAFFIC.

Chicago Charged With Being Clearing House for Same.

Chicago, Nov. 15.—Charges that Chicago is the clearing house center of white slave traffic, which covers not only the United States, but which sells unfortunate girls to Panama and the harems of Turkey and Egypt, were made Thursday night by Miss Rose Johnson, a London rescue worker, at a mass meeting held at the Central Y. M. C. A.

Judge Fred L. Fake, chairman of the meeting, told of numerous instances where it had appeared that a white slave syndicate was doing business in Chicago.

Street Car Men on Strike.

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 15.—The union men employed by the Louisville Street Railway company went on strike Friday morning, for an increase in wages and the reinstatement of several discharged men. The company employs about 1,100 men, of whom 900 are members of the Amalagamated Association of Street Railway Employees. Very few cars had been run up to 8:30 a. m. and these were at 8:40 a. m. loaded down with police. This is the second street car strike Louisville has experienced in seven months.

Banquet to Gov. Magoon.

Havana, Nov. 15.—To show the gratitude of the country for good government, the chamber of commerce has unanimously decided to give a banquet to Governor Magoon. It is planned to make a huge demonstration of the banquet and in furtherance thereof all the commercial, agricultural and industrial elements of the island will be represented.

Died of Heart Failure.

San Antonio, Nov. 15.—P. Martinez Del Rio, probably the most prominent lawyer of Mexico died Thursday night at a local hotel, of heart failure. He had been a visitor at the San Antonio international fair during the afternoon, it being Mexico day. He was a warm personal friend and ardent supporter of President Diaz.

Suspected of Robberies.

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 15.—Marvin Young, a young man wanted for a series of robberies committed in West End three years ago, has been arrested in a saloon in Birmingham. He is suspected of being the man who held up and robbed Deputy Sheriff U. N. Carl.

GARY ON FINANCES.

Says There Is Too Much Fuss Over So-Called "Financial Flurry."

Chicago, Nov. 15.—Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the board of directors of the United States Steel corporation, thinks there is "too much discussion" of the financial conditions of the country.

"All this talk about the so-called tight money market makes people really believe there is one when, as a matter of fact, everything is in first class shape," he said:

"If I thought there was anything the matter with the country's finances I would not hesitate to give my views at length. But what is the sense in making a great fuss over the so-called financial flurry?

"In a little while all the disturbance will be over, and then the persons who have been doing a lot of talking about the temporary financial upset will feel silly, I think.

"It is not a time for talking. It is a time for a strengthening of the general core in unquestionable financial soundness and abounding material prosperity of the nation."

AUTHORESS SUICIDES.

Mrs. May French Takes Deadly Dose of Cyanide of Potassium.

San Francisco, Calif., Nov. 15.—Mrs. May French, poetess and authoress, ended her life Thursday by taking cyanide of potassium at the Bungalow of the late George P. Sterling at Carmel-by-the-Sea, a rendezvous of artists and writers on the Pacific ocean below Monterey.

No reason can be assigned for the suicidal act and her friends seek in vain for some explanation for the impulse which prompted her to take her life in such a sudden and tragic manner.

Miss French enjoyed good health and her life, to all appearances, ran smoothly, giving every promise of a brilliant career. For some years past she had been a contributor to various court magazines and some of her verses and prose have found their way into eastern publications. Miss French was 24 years of age.

BRYAN MAKES NO FIGHT.

But He Will Accept Nomination If It Is Tendered Him.

Lincoln, Nebr., Nov. 15.—William J. Bryan will accept the democratic nomination for president in 1908, but he will neither ask for nor make a fight for it.

Mr. Bryan says that for a year or more he has been pressed to answer the question, "Will you accept the nomination?" and he believes the public is entitled to an answer and to know the position he occupies. The question that ought to weigh most, he says, is whether he's nomination will strengthen or weaken the principles of the Democracy.

"If I can do the party the greatest service by refusing to accept the nomination, I will refuse it; if I can do it by accepting it, I will accept it. I have no personal ambition to serve, but I have strength and common gray matter.

Officers Are Elected.

Savannah, Ga., Nov. 15.—The annual meeting of the Southern Express company, held here, was attended by President M. J. O'Brien, of New York, and other officers. There was no change in either the officers or directors. The Southern Express company is owned largely by Morton F. Plant, the millionaire yachtsman, of New York. The officers of the company, who were re-elected are: President, M. J. O'Brien, of New York; vice president, O. H. Tilley, of New York; vice president, C. L. Lane, of Chattanooga. These, with Loop O. M. Saddler, of Charlotte, N. C.; T. W. Leary, of Atlanta; M. J. O'Brien, of Chattanooga; E. M. Williams, of New York, and S. R. Gallibert, of Washington, constitute the board of directors.

Alleged Shortage in Accounts.

Gadsden, Ala., Nov. 15.—A sensation was sprung in the city Thursday when it was announced by the city officials that the accounts of ex-City Clerk Clarke had been carefully audited and there was found to be a shortage on the books of a sum approximating $1,700.61. The money unaccounted for is distributed over a period of two years from 1905 to 1907. Clarke resigned at the request of the city council in July last because of apparent irregularities in the business of his office. An investigation was immediately begun by City Clerk Wilkins and Accountant R. J. Hughs, with the above result.

Prohibition Election Ordered.

Montgomery, Ala., Nov. 15.—In pursuance of a petition filed by 25 per cent of the qualified voters, as required by law, Probate Judge Gaston on Thursday ordered an election in Montgomery county for Dec. 14 to determine the question of prohibiting the sale of liquor. The anti-prohibitionists succeeded in eliminating names from the original petition, but this left the prohibition advocates within the requirements. Of 3,661 voters, 915 were recognized on the list.

Well Known Actor Dies.

New York, Nov. 15.—Charles H. Drew, formerly a member of Frank Daniels "Sergeant Bliss" company, who retired last June after being on the stage for forty-four years, died Thursday at his home here, of heart disease. Mr. Drew was 61 years old and was born in Massillon, Ohio.

Indicted for Peonage.

Pensacola, Fla., Nov. 15.—Thomas M. Graham and J. B. Graham, large naval stores operators in Escambia county, Alabama, were indicted Wednesday by the United States grand jury for peonage. The Grahams are accused of holding negroes in peonage. One count charges that they crossed into Florida and secured a man from the plant of the Mayes Turpentine company. Mr. Mayes objected and a volley is said to have been exchanged. The trial of the Grahams will begin in Pensacola next week.

Executive Mansion Sold.

Lincoln, Neb., Nov. 15.—Governor George L. Sheldon was notified Thursday that the executive mansion had been sold for the delinquent taxes for 1899, and unless the taxes and costs were paid, a tax deed would be issued according to law. The taxes amount to $332 and the interest and cost to $83. The mansion was purchased in June, 1899, by the state from D. E. Thompson, United States ambassador to Mexico, for $25,000.

Many Italians Jailed.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 15.—There are between forty and fifty Italians in jail at Columbia, Tenn., charged with an attempt to beat their board bills. These men were brought from the city of St. Louis, Mo., under contract to work on railroad construction at $1.25 per day. On arrival they claim they were given $2.35 and refused to go to work.

Wireless Station Burned.

Nantucket, Mass., Nov. 15.—The Marconi wireless station at Siasconset was destroyed by fire Friday. The loss will be seriously felt, as operations will be interrupted for several weeks.

Salvation Army Steamers.

London, Nov. 15.—According to the Shipping Gazette, there is a probability that the Salvation Army will soon own several trans-Atlantic steamers. The steamers will be used in connection with the Army's scheme for promoting Canadian immigration.

THE BRADLEY'S TRIAL

Prosecution Will Soon Complete Its Testimony.

DEFENSE READY TO BEGIN

Celebrated Case Being Tried at Washington, D. C., in Which a Woman Is on Trial for Her Life, Is Nearing Its Close.

Washington, Nov. 15.—When the trial of Mrs. Bradley was resumed on Friday it was apparent that the prosecution would soon complete its testimony, and the attorneys for the defense were prepared to present their side of the case as speedily as possible.

At the adjournment of court Thursday District Attorney Baker was engaged in an effort to obtain from members of the police force the details of the confession said to have been made by Mrs. Bradley immediately after her arrest on the charge of shooting former Senator Brown, but up to that time, Mr. Hoover had successfully opposed this purpose because, as he claimed, it was made under the false assumption on Mrs. Bradley's part that what she said would not be used against her.

The prosecuting attorney was not especially persistent in pressing the point and was quite inclined to drop it altogether. The only remaining feature of his direct presentation of the case is the reading of certain notes written by Mrs. Bradley while in the jail at Salt Lake City, and Mr. Baker intimated that Mrs. Bradley's attorneys that very little time would be consumed on this feature of the case.

It was stated on behalf of Mrs. Bradley that the defense would be begun with the presentation of testimony to sustain her plea that she was insane and irresponsible when the shooting occurred, but that this would be preceded by a statement from Mr. Hoover outlining in detail the evidence upon which this plea would be made.

PRAY FOR SUCCESS.

Prayers Offered by College Football Players for Victory.

Ribmond, Va., Nov. 15.—For the first time in the history of any college so far as known, prayer was offered up Thursday by the students of Earlham college for the success of the Earlham football team Saturday.

In accordance with a vote taken by the students of the college it was decided to devote the hour of 10 o'clock this morning to the consideration of the application of Earlham college for membership in the Indiana Intercollegiate Athletic association. After the meeting is called to order by the president of the college, prayer will be offered by the students, asking for divine strength and common gray matter.

Officers Are Elected.

Savannah, Ga., Nov. 15.—The annual meeting of the Southern Express company, held here, was attended by President M. J. O'Brien, of New York, and other officers. There was no change in either the officers or directors. The Southern Express company is owned largely by Morton F. Plant, the millionaire yachtsman, of New York. The officers of the company, who were re-elected are: President, M. J. O'Brien, of New York; vice president, O. H. Tilley, of New York; vice president, C. L. Lane, of Chattanooga. These, with Loop O. M. Saddler, of Charlotte, N. C.; T. W. Leary, of Atlanta; M. J. O'Brien, of Chattanooga; E. M. Williams, of New York, and S. R. Gallibert, of Washington, constitute the board of directors.

Alleged Shortage in Accounts.

Gadsden, Ala., Nov. 15.—A sensation was sprung in the city Thursday when it was announced by the city officials that the accounts of ex-City Clerk Clarke had been carefully audited and there was found to be a shortage on the books of a sum approximating $1,700.61. The money unaccounted for is distributed over a period of two years from 1905 to 1907. Clarke resigned at the request of the city council in July last because of apparent irregularities in the business of his office. An investigation was immediately begun by City Clerk Wilkins and Accountant R. J. Hughs, with the above result.

Prohibition Election Ordered.

Montgomery, Ala., Nov. 15.—In pursuance of a petition filed by 25 per cent of the qualified voters, as required by law, Probate Judge Gaston on Thursday ordered an election in Montgomery county for Dec. 14 to determine the question of prohibiting the sale of liquor. The anti-prohibitionists succeeded in eliminating names from the original petition, but this left the prohibition advocates within the requirements. Of 3,661 voters, 915 were recognized on the list.

Well Known Actor Dies.

New York, Nov. 15.—Charles H. Drew, formerly a member of Frank Daniels "Sergeant Bliss" company, who retired last June after being on the stage for forty-four years, died Thursday at his home here, of heart disease. Mr. Drew was 61 years old and was born in Massillon, Ohio.

NEW STATE IS ADDED

One More Star to Go on the American Flag.

OKLAHOMA IS NOW ADMITTED

President Roosevelt on Saturday Signs the Proclamation Admitting Oklahoma and Indian Territory Jointly as a State.

Washington, Nov. 16.—A new star was added to the American flag by the admission formally to the Union of the state of Oklahoma. President Roosevelt at 10:16 Saturday morning signed the proclamation admitting the territories of Oklahoma and Indian Territory jointly as one of the American states. Little formality attended the ceremony which meant so much to the people of the two territories.

In appending his signature to the proclamation, the President used a pen formed from a quill plucked from the wing of an American eagle.

The pen will be deposited with the Oklahoma historical society.

Guthrie, Okla., Nov. 16.—With impressive ceremonies befitting the birth of the new state of Oklahoma, the oaths of office were administered to Governor Chas. N. Haskell, and other state officers a few minutes before noon Saturday.

The oath was given by Leslie Niblack, a newspaper man. The ceremonies took place on the steps of the Carnegie library, there being no state building at this place. Following prayer by clergymen, the proclamation of President Roosevelt admitting Oklahoma and Indian Territory into the union was read by Charles Wilson, secretary of Oklahoma territory. The text of the order, which was telegraphed from Washington a short time before the consummation, was brief and closed as follows:

"I, Theodore Roosevelt, president of the United States of America, in accordance with the enabling act of congress and by authority thereof, do hereby declare the result of the election to be as certified, and do hereby declare and proclaim that the terms and conditions prescribed by congress to entitle the state of Oklahoma admission into the Union on an equal footing with the original thirteen states are accomplished."

A band of Cherokee Indian boys then played "The Star Spangled Banner."

Governor Haskell walked forward to the center of the platform, where he was met by Mr. Niblack and took the formal oath with uplifted hand. Turning to the crowd that closed in from every direction, Governor Haskell delivered the inaugural address.

TRIAL OF MRS. BRADLEY.

Defense Will Make Insanity Plea in Defense of Woman.

Washington, Nov. 16.—That the defense of Mrs. Annie M. Bradley, on trial in criminal court No. 1 on the charge of murdering former United States Senator Brown, would be insanity was made evident beyond question by the preliminary statement made to the court Friday by her attorney, Mr. Hoover.

The prosecution consumed the entire forenoon in concluding the examination of its witnesses in chief to prove the facts of the killing, and when it rested the case, Mr. Hoover followed with his preliminary outline of the case for the defense.

He denied the principal events of Mrs. Bradley's life and entered minutely into the circumstances of her intimacy with Brown, saying that it would be proved that she was completely under his domination and forecasting testimony which would be adduced to show that she was mentally irresponsible when she fired the fatal shot. He also said it would be shown that Mr. Brown had performed more than one criminal act upon her with his own hands, and that he had presented her with the pistol with which she killed him, telling her that she should use it upon his wife if she gave trouble. According to Mr. Hoover's statement, it also will be shown that there is a taint of insanity in Mrs. Bradley's family.

Going to Wed; Found Burglar.

Savannah, Ga., Nov. 16.—As Colonel William Garrard left his home on Abercorn street preparing to take the train for Nashville, where he is to get married, he found a burglar in the house. The burglar was a white man. The colonel did not stop to miss his train, but had the barracks notified by telephone. A search was made of the house and a lighted candle found in the dining room. Some burglars' tools were also found but so far nothing has been missed.

Juneu, Alaska, Nov. 16.—The endorsement of William H. Taft for the presidency and a ringing demand for home rule and the salient features of the platform reported at the Alaskan Republican convention.

Special Session Is Called.

Sacramento, Cal., Nov. 16.—Governor Gillett has issued a proclamation for the legislature to consider measures in connection with the money stringency.

$200,000 FIRE LOSS

Bay St. Louis, Miss., Is Swept by Destructive Blaze.

BLOWN BY HIGH GULF WIND

St. Joseph's Convent, a Famous Institution, Was Fatally Destroyed as Was Also the Catholic Church, Theater and Other Buildings.

Bay St. Louis, Miss., Nov. 16.—Fire which started here shortly before 2 o'clock Saturday morning was swept by a high gulf wind through the town burning to the ground everything in its path and causing a damage of about $200,000.

St. Joseph's convent, one of the most famous institutions of its kind in this section of the south, was totally destroyed, and the Catholic church and priest's house were also burned.

Other buildings destroyed were the Olsanch theater, hotel Clifton, the Cumberland Telephone building and the Butler building.

It was not until shortly after noon that the fire was finally gotten under control, and only then after aid had been requested and sent from Biloxi and nearby towns.

It was feared at one time that St. Stanislaus college would fall in the path of the flames, but this was saved. It is not known how the fire originated, but it is believed to have started in a store on the first floor of the opera house building.

When the fire was discovered the flames had made such headway that with the high wind as a factor subduing the fire was impossible.

Nearly all of the property destroyed was either partially or entirely covered by insurance.

127,000 POPULATION.

That Is What Is Claimed for Atlanta.

Atlanta, Nov. 16.—Atlanta, in the midst of a population of 127,000 people, a gain of 22,000 over last year, according to the figures compiled by Joseph W. Hill, publisher of the new city directory for 1908. In addition to these figures the directory will show that Atlanta suburbs will total the Atlanta population at 165,000, a clear gain of over 16,000 over the figures for the 1907 directory. The gain in the suburbs this year kept pace with that of the city.

The directory enumerators kept track, too, of the new houses put up since the old directory was issued, and this shows a total of 2,160. The number of "For Rent" signs were also counted, and these total 1,212 houses as compared to 780 last year.

Mr. Hill has kept special track of saloon property to be vacated on the 1st of January, and states that a majority of these have already been rented in the next thirty days.

TWO INJURED IN RUNAWAY.

Dr. Sheridan, of Columbus, Probably Fatally Injured.

Columbus, Ga., Nov. 16.—Dr. W. D. Sheridan and Taylor Ham were thrown out of a buggy and injured, the former perhaps fatally, Thursday afternoon on the Hamilton road north of Columbus, their horse becoming frightened at an automobile and running away.

Dr. Sheridan was picked up in an unconscious condition, and from the fact that blood was running from his ears and a superficial examination of his injuries, the attending physicians think that his skull was fractured at the base of the brain and pronounce his condition as extremely serious. Dr. Sheridan is about 65 years of age. He and Mr. Ham were returning from a day's hunt when the accident occurred.

Louisville Street Car Strike

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 16.—The Louisville Railway company was able Saturday morning to give an increased service on all its lines despite the assertion of the men, who struck Friday, that they had won over a large number of the strike-breakers. A fair schedule was maintained on the principal lines and the cars coming down town early carried many passengers. The company also began the operation of one of its suburban lines. One hundred and twenty-five additional strike breakers arrived during the morning.

Bank Suspends Payment.

Sandpoint, Idaho, Nov. 16.—The Traders State bank, capitalized at $15,000, suspended payment temporarily Friday. Inability to realize on $60,000 of secured loans is given as the cause of suspension. The bank's deposits amount to $125,000, all of which the officials have pledged themselves to make good.

Keene Gives Jockey $12,000.

New York, Nov. 16.—Walter Miller, the most successful jockey in America, this year as last, has received from Jas R. Keene a check on the National City bank for $12,000, this being 5 per cent of the money the jockey won for Mr. Keene this year.

... outside the vessel's armor. Before this Captain Elliott had provided a new head for the figure, and the wooden statue of Jackson that is now at Annapolis was at the prow of the vessel for forty years.

Captain Elliott's last voyage on the Constitution was from the Mediterranean to Hampton Roads in 1839. Here he spent months in charge of the vessel, being unable to obtain orders relieving him from the command of the ship on the bottom of the Mediterranean. Finally, however, he was relieved and ordered to the command of the navy yard at Portsmouth, N. H., after a career of nearly forty-eight years in the service. In addition he was instructor at Annapolis for the use of the old shipmen.

When the civil war began her portion there was a small guard, and she remained at the Navy Yard in quiet until 1861, when she was taken to Philadelphia, where she was laid up until 1871, when she was taken to Portsmouth. Here she was again rebuilt in 1874, and was used to transport exhibits to Brooklyn for the Navy Yard exhibit in 1876, and had a career as a utility vessel in 1881. The centennial of her launching was celebrated at Boston in 1897, when she was visited by thousands.—Baltimore Sun.

Newport's Famous Church.

Newport is to lose its "Little Church Around the Corner," where Julia Dent Grant was married and where many other fashionable weddings have taken place. The church is to be sold for lack of support. The intention is says the Providence Journal, to use the proceeds in procuring eminent scholars, writers and ministers of the Protestant Episcopal faith in the United States of America to deliver lectures and sermons and to disseminate and expound the gospel, doctrines and belief of the Protestant Episcopal church in Newport churches.

Editor Enquirer—Will you please allow me space to make a request that the Treasurer's report be published in the Enquirer. I notice that it was published in the Union last week, and as I am a tax payer in county, I think that it should be published in both papers. By this means almost every citizen would see it, as every soldier reads the Union. I think it right for this report to be made public to all over the tax paying people of the county.

The Castle Comedy

By Thompson Buchanan

This is a rolling good love story of merry old England at the close of the Napoleonic wars.

In the scene pictured here the wilful young lady is telling her father she doesn't intend to marry. She means she does not intend to marry the noble-man her father has selected.

The reason, as the reader soon discovers, is that she has fallen in love with a French dancing master. Out of this complication grows the story.

Even if Thompson Buchanan were not a Louisville boy and had not written pleasing stories for the Herald we would not hesitate in commending to his Castle Comedy the palm for absolute fascination.

—Louisville Herald.

The Castle Comedy will be printed in this paper. Look for it.

TREASURE OF THE DESERT.

In the Sahara All Property Is Expressed by Camels.

Primitive peoples who have no money measure all values by that possession which is most desired and most easily transferred. Thus among most of the inhabitants of the Sahara the camel is the measure of all values. Property, riches and camels are synonymous terms among most of the dwellers in the Sahara. Dr. Goldstein of Germany wrote awhile ago that if a Tuareg were set down in the streets of Berlin the business blocks and residences would convey to him no idea of property. He would simply ask the greatest real estate landlord in the city how many camels he owned.

When Richardson met the Tuaregs and was entertained by one of their chiefs the traveler was told by his host that he wished to make Queen Victoria the finest present that any one could give her, and so he asked his guest to take back to her a mehari, which is a camel trained to fleetness and the most costly of the Saharan camels.

While Barth was sojourning in Timbuktu there was danger for a few days that the street mob would attack his house. One of the women servants advised him to remove his harem to a place of safety. This word means live stock, such as cattle or camels, and Barth told the woman that he had only his horse with him. It was some time before he learned that the servant did not mean to refer particularly to his horse, but to all his possessions.

When the Frenchman Henret succeeded in navigating the Niger from its mouth to Timbuktu some years ago a desert dweller, desiring to learn if he came of a family of substance, asked him how many camels his father owned, and when Foureau crossed the desert with the largest exploring party that ever entered the Sahara he received from a wealthy native of Algier a present of a white camel and was told that it was the most expensive present that the residents of that region could give to any one.

As a rule, however, the number of camels in the possession of one individual is not large. The average man considers himself well to do if he owns two or three animals, the important chief is really wealthy if he possesses a herd of fifty or sixty, and the richest chief whom Nachtigal met in his seven years' wanderings was said to own about 100 camels. No one will part with his camels excepting at an exorbitant price. Foureau found it impossible to buy them in the heart of the desert for less than about 250 francs, which was double their value in Algeria.

The grazing grounds are common to all, and there is no property in land. The richest man lives in a tent, and why should he sell camels to acquire the means to build a more commodious and substantial dwelling when he expects to move to some other place in a few weeks or months? He simply acquires all the camels he can get for the mere fun of having them.

To be sure, he buys wives with his camels, just as the negro does with his cattle, and wives come very high in the Sahara, the daughter of the ordinary man being worth as much as four camels, while the price of a chief's daughter can be commanded only by the wealthy. Some explorers believe that very fat young women are most popular in the desert simply because camel's milk is fattening, and if a girl is fleshy it shows that her father has given her all the camel's milk she can drink. Such a father must have a number of camels, is therefore a wealthy man, and it will be a good thing to marry into his family.—Washington Post.

HINTS FOR FARMERS

Shoeing Hogs.

Dr. Hamel says there is no way old foreshoes feet, but the animal suffering may be relieved. The following is his method: Prepare a shallow trough a foot wide, of a depth of about six inches and two feet long. Fill this with water, in which place just salt enough to make it a little brackish (not a brine). Then allow the animal to stand in this for an hour twice weekly and soak her feet in this salty water. In connection with this, three times weekly apply to the coronets some of the following: Oil of tar, one ounce; oil of turpentine, one ounce; raw linseed oil, three ounces. The bar shoe is all right provided it is properly made and is fitted properly. If not, it is all wrong, and I am sorry to add not one horseshoer in ten understands the foot of a horse and its requirements well enough to make and fit a bar shoe. I therefore think a rubber frog pad will be far better.—Farmers Advocate.

Wintering Bees.

Where beekeeping is carried on extensively, especially in the northern states, it is the custom of most beekeepers to winter their colonies indoors.

For this purpose some use the ordinary house cellar, darkening the same and carefully watching the temperature, while others have built special cellars for the purpose, where as many as 1,000 colonies are kept in one place.

In indoor wintering it is very important to see that the temperature is kept as nearly between 45 and 60 degrees as possible, the nearer 45 degrees the better, but a slight variation from the above figures for a brief period will do no special harm.

If at any time the cellar becomes too warm it should be cooled off at night by leaving the door open, but be careful to close it again before daybreak.—Farm Journal.

Hog Notes.

The hog that will make the heaviest hog in the shortest time is the one the farmer should keep.

Where clover, alfalfa or cowpeas will grow there is no use thinking you have to stuff the hog on nothing but corn.

If the sow has had cholera and recovered, keep her for breeding. Her pigs may not be immune, but there is no danger in her taking it again.

It is not how much you pay for your hogs, but how much he digests, that adds dollars to your bank account. Watch the excrement, and if grains of corn are passed undigested change feed and reduce the corn ration.

Kerosene For Mites.

The value of kerosene as a preventive against mites has been proved, says Farm Journal. A simple way to apply the same to fowls is to half fill a small can with the oil, into which insert an ordinary lamp wick, allowing the wick to hang down over the side of the can. Hang this over the small door meant for the fowls' own use at such a height that each bird in passing through will have to touch the dripping wick. This will deposit a few drops of kerosene on the feathers, and the constant passing beneath the wick will keep the oil about the birds until the mites leave in disgust.

Dairy Pointers.

Do not be in a hurry about turning the cows on to frost covered grass in the early morning. 'Tis better to first let Old Sol throw off the frost.

Stable the cows early on windy days. If bunched up, shivering or hugging the lee side of pasture bunch they cannot be making much milk or laying on fat.

As stabling for the winter will soon begin each cow's appetite should be studied. It is well to bear in mind that with a really good cow generous feeding always pays.—American Cultivator.

Dairy Notes.

Some dairymen fast the cow several days before the date of calving to prevent milk fever. All rich feeds are gradually decreased till the animal receives nothing but a little hay and soft feed, made of equal parts bran and ground oats.

Bear in mind that it takes cream and not skim milk to make butter. When skimming the cream leave all the skim milk in the can and feed it to the hogs. It will be of value to them, but an absolute detriment if any of it is allowed to go into the cream jar.

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

Our Disappearing Forests.

Gifford Pinchot, the government forester, who has just completed a six months' inspection trip in which he traveled 4,000 miles, reports an alarming diminution of our lumber supply. "In twenty years," says Mr. Pinchot, "the timber supply in the United States on government reserves and private holdings at the present rate of cutting will be exhausted."

In sounding his warning Mr. Pinchot urged that the danger of the situation should not be underestimated. He said that the United States uses more timber than any other country and that every man, woman and child would be affected. He decried the policy of discounting the future of the country by failure to protect the natural resources, and he advises every one who has not already done so to read President Roosevelt's speech at Memphis on this general subject.

About one-fifth of the forest area of the country is in government reserves, but Mr. Pinchot called attention to the fact that, as privately owned timber lands are better than the government reserves as a rule, the government does not control one-fifth of the timber supply.

Mr. Pinchot has studied forestry in France, Germany, Switzerland and Austria. He began systematic forestry work in the United States in 1898. Since 1905 he has been chief of the bureau of forestry. Mr. Pinchot is a native of Connecticut, a Yale graduate and is forty-two years old.

Quiet Knox.

Senator Philander C. Knox of Pennsylvania does things quietly and easily, but none the less effectively.

Some years ago Ex-President Harrison called upon him in his Pittsburg office.

"I have been requested to ask you to serve as my associate in some Cincinnati street railway cases," said General Harrison, "and I hope you will accept."

Knox signified his willingness to do so and suggested that they pool fees and divide equally.

"No," responded Harrison; "I will take my fee and you get yours."

After the litigation was ended Harrison called again on Knox.

"Well," he said in a satisfied way, "I did pretty well in that case. I received a check for $25,000."

"Is that all?" quietly asked Knox. "I received $100,000. If you had pooled as I originally suggested, general, you would have got $62,500."—Cleveland Leader.

A Convicted Insurance Official.

Dr. Walter R. Gillette, former vice president of the Mutual Life Insurance company, who was recently convicted of perjury in the New York courts, has had a remarkable career. From an obscure position in the medical department he became general manager and finally second only to McCurdy in the affairs of that great institution.

Dr. Gillette served in the civil war as a surgeon and later was connected with the New York postoffice. While there under Postmaster James he worked out the plan for the first civil service system adopted in any federal institution. His success attracted the attention of President Winston, then head of the Mutual Life, and he became a member of the medical staff. From that time his rise was rapid.

Hard to Understand.

"What I don't understand is how a canary bird whistles without puckering its bill," said little Willie.

Want Hole.

Editor Banner—If you will please allow me space in your valuable paper to express my views in regard to various present events of the day, shall be obliged and endeavor to do so. First, I wish to say that the Banner is the leading paper of Chilton county, in fact the only paper printed in the county, and for this reason we should be justly proud, and co-operate with the Editor in making it interesting. The question is how are we to make it interesting? Just simply by writing interesting letters, for nobody cares about Aunt Patsy visiting Aunt Sarah Jones last Sunday and reporting a nice time, for it's reasonable to suppose that she had a good time, for when our kindred come we most generally open a can of peaches, kill a chicken and do around generally, and after we have done all this, who cares to know? No one, save Aunt Patsy and Aunt Sarah Jane, and not generally them; they forget the occasion until they want another good dinner, and then mind you they never fail to cousin, uncle or aunt you as the case may be. I have actually known folks to walk twenty miles to a dinner. The reason why I say dinner, is because dinner was the chief object even though the occasion was one of singing or some other good service, but really were those boys going for the good of the service? I should say, judging from the past they are not, for nine out of every ten of the boys that go to these all day singings and gatherings have to, in order to be in keeping with the day, have a bottle in his pocket.

Now, girls, if you allow those brutes to keep your sweet company then how can you ever expect any better of them? For if you should fail to raise and place him as your equal, then you may be sure of him pulling you on a level with him. But I'm glad to note that the girls are awakening to a sense of their duty in regard to this question. I highly endorse the piece sent in by one, signed "Papa's Girl," for such letters as this are of much interest, and all the boys should take heed and profit thereby. Second, I wish to say a few words in behalf of the honorable farmer, for really they are the most honorable and should be the highest respected class of people under the sun, but still they have the least show of any other class, for if they contend for their rights, some blobber mouth will yell out and try to condemn them. But thank God, the farmers are beginning to see the situation of affairs as they now exist. Fight your cotton regardless of all gas expelled from those low-down demons, for it will be in the end to your interest, for all knows that this financial flurry is for the detriment of the farmer. Then, if you fail to stand out for your rights you are not only working to your ruin, but to the ruin of your neighbor as well. Of course the speculator will squall out 15 cents is too much for cotton, but but doesn't the producer have a right to for better know the actual value of his produce than anyone else? I should think so. Is eighty per cent too much to make on 5 pair of shoes? Will leave that to you farmers to answer, yet I know a merchant to make such profit. Papa's Boy.

Economical.

"I believe I have found the prize economic economist," said an east side baker the other day. "She was just moved into my neighborhood, and I understand the family is by no means poor. The wife came into my place Monday and bought a dozen small cakes. I supposed they were for tea that evening. Imagine my astonishment when she came back Friday evening carrying a small paper sack, from the depths of which she carefully drew forth three of the identical cakes I had sold her four days before. Nodding her head toward them, as she set them down on the counter before me, she said sweetly, 'Won't you please exchange these for some fresh ones?' at the same time indicating a batch that I had brought from the oven not half an hour before."

"Well, what did you do?" asked the baker's sympathetic friend.

"Do? I gave her three of the fresh ones. I think I must have been mesmerized. Next thing I know she will be bringing back the bread crusts to have new loaves put inside them."—Columbus Dispatch.

Odd Baby Customs.

Among the Parsees when a child is born a priest takes the place of the medicine man, carefully noting down all details of birth and "calculating its nativity" to a nicety. Having graciously consulted the parents, he announces the child's name. Baptism by water and by fire follows, the infant being first dipped in a tub and afterward taken to church to be held over a flame.

In Persia the baby is laid on the floor while five names on five different slips of paper are either tucked under the edge of the carpet or hidden in the Koran. The first chapter of this holy book is then read and a slip drawn at random. The chosen name is confided to the baby's ear, but lest he should forget his wee memory is tagged by fastening the paper to his clothing.—Los Angeles Times.

Origin of His Name.

In correcting the exercises of her class a teacher recently observed a new name inscribed on one of the papers—Tom Brown.

She looked round the class, but could see no new boy. Not a little puzzled, she requested Tom Brown to stand.

Up jumped Tommy Smith, and the teacher got more puzzled still.

"Your name's Smith," she said, "not Brown."

Tommy looked not a little shamed and shifted uneasily from one foot to the other.

"Please, ma'am," he said, "it's owing to family trouble. I didn't do it, please, ma'am."

"But," she said sternly, "I repeat, your name is Smith."

"Please, ma'am," said the boy, "it's changed now. Ma's married the lodger."—London Mail.

Coughs and Colds in Children.

"My little girl is subject to colds" says Mrs. Wm. H. Sorig, No. 41, Fifth St., Wheeling, W. Va. "Last winter she had a severe spell and a terrible cough but I cured her with Chamberlain's Cough remedy without the aid of a doctor, and my little boy has been prevented many times from having the croup by the timely use of this syrup." This remedy is for sale by Upchurch Drug Co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thorsby.

They Tax All Signs.

Every sign in Rio Janeiro is taxed. A cafe having a special "service," or fee, to serve makes a placard and hangs it to a doorpost or to one of the palm trees in tubs which commonly decorate such establishments. The notice thus posted must have a revenue stamp attached. Permanent signs are taxed on a permanent basis, temporary signs on a stamped basis. A sign "House For Rent" bears a revenue stamp. Under such circumstances the tax on signboards or billboards is the expected thing, but naturally there is much less general use of such forms of advertising.

Second Best.

"No," said the sweet young thing, "I wouldn't marry the best man on earth."

"Then my case must be hopeless," said the youth sorrowfully.

"Not at all. I simply said that to encourage you."—Pittsburg Press.

There is a vast difference, says a wise philosopher, between wishing and winning. Many a good man has failed because he had his wishbone where his backbone ought to have been.

Things He Saw.

A gentleman in a Liverpool restaurant the other day thought he would have a joke with the waiter and asked him if he had ever seen a sausage roll.

"Yes," replied the waiter. "I have not only seen a sausage roll, but I have seen a biscuit box, a table spoon, a bicycle pump, a penny stamp, a chimney sweep, a chain link, a nose guy, a tapeers slide, a garden fence, a sword fish, a spoke shave, a snail fence, etc."

But when he got to "a fire escape" the gentleman thought it was time he escaped too.

As he was going the waiter went on with "a tap tune, a cake walk, a mountain climb, a sky lark, a honey comb"—

But by this time the customer was hurrying down the street in a dazed condition.—Liverpool Mercury.

The Keen Kutter Safety Razor

There is no reason why every man should not use the "Keen Kutter" Safety Razor.

Your beard may be tough as wire and your skin as tender as a baby's; or your beard may be uneven; part wiry and part soft as silk; or your face may be so sensitive and tender that the mere thought of a barber gives you a cold chill.

These difficulties are all overcome by using the Keen Kutter Safety Razor. The man who has made a complete failure with other Safety Razors and considers none of them good, should try our Keen Kutter. They are sold under a strict guarantee.

Try one and you will be pleased. Ask Rev. F. M. Woods, pastor of the Baptist Church, Clanton, Ala., what he thinks of them.

DON'T BUY A SWISS WATCH

There are too many good watches made in America for you to buy a worthless Swiss make. We do not sell Swiss watches and only sell the leading American makes, such as Elgin, Waltham, Rockford, South Bend, Illinois, etc. Buy the best. We are judges of a good watch and will not sell anything but a good one. We do not sell second handed watches either; nothing but first class new goods to be sold here.

Let us show you the best stock of watches ever shown in Shelby County.

The Castle Comedy

By THOMPSON BUCHANAN

Copyright, 1904, by HARPER & BROTHERS

"I believe with the Scriptures," began the captain, "that he who capturetth a woman's heart is greater than he that taketh a city."

"Did Lord Byron or Sir Walter Scott write your Bible, captain?" asked Mistress Stanfield. But the soldier was impervious to assault.

"And I will add," he continued, with a meaning glance at Ethel Courtleigh, "great is the woman who will allow her heart to be captured. And so—and so—I will drink a health to those who have so closely followed the Scriptures, and may they always show their wisdom and—and—er—magnanimity, as they have done on this occasion."

The captain gave place to James Bate amid cheers and laughter.

"Upon my word, I ought to say something," he began. "I know I ought—I ought, but I cannot think of it. We should all be glad, I dare say—don't you think we should all—that is, you and I—all of us"—

"A handsome pair, eh, James?" suggested Sir Henry.

"Yes, I don't know—oh, yes, of course—that is, I—" He cleared his throat, then paused for a moment, silent, awkward. "It's embarrassing to the dev"—

The captain coughed violently. James Bate stood, not knowing what to do. The others laughed.

Suddenly from behind the tree at the left appeared Dubarre. In five quick strides he had reached the spot and stood there. His head was high, his body erect. It was not the cringing master, but a suffering-made gentleman among his peers, who came magnanimously to add his soul-fulfilment to the rest. By comparison the exquisite opposite was mere awkward, more silly, than ever. The guests looked up astounded.

"Pardon, monsieur." And, with the air of a fifteenth gentleman, Dubarre reached over and took Sir John Winnerding's wineglass. Then he stepped back so as to face May Percy and the rest.

"May a poor Frenchman, an interloper, add his humble toast to mademoiselle?" he asked.

Sir Henry half rose, but the girl bowed without speaking, and he subsided.

Next, as silent, breathless at his audacity, they watched him, Dubarre raised his glass:

"To the Lady of Moods.
"To the Countess of Grace.
"To the Duchess of Gayety.
"To the Queen of Courtesy.
"To the Empress of Hearts.
"To the Goddess of Love.

"To her whose beauty now, like a mountain torrent from above, rushes o'er.

"Next, as the thoughtful pool at the heart of nature, woos one;

"Whose courtesy is the constant, sweet picturing of her heart's innocence;

"The purity of whose soul, shining from midnight eyes, would shame the whitest moonlight;

"Whose Alpine courage and goodness tower above the clouds of man's understanding;

"Whose wit, as sun's rays flashing on those snow clad heights, dazzles, but does not wound;

"Whose moods are as the snowflakes, infinite, yet each its very own;

"Whose love, as that snow, pure, and undefiled, rests high, secure on the mountain of her trust;

"Whose whole self is God's expression of perfect joy to man.

"To her, then, whom, seeing, man must say, 'I have followed marsh lights, but now the evening star henceforth I follow no more marsh lights.'"

He paused a moment, then added, with deepest loving reverence:

"To Mistress Percy. God bless her!"

He drank and, as in the groom's toast, snapped off the stem of his glass. Then he stood looking down at it, the pieces in his hand. And in his face could be read plainly what the broken glass meant to him.

With an unbidden oath, Sir John started up from his seat. Mistress Percy laid a restraining hand on his arm, and he sat down again. At the foot of the table Sir Henry Percy sprang to his feet.

"Have done! Have done!" the squire cried. "'Tis time for the dance. Come, sir, if you can't admire it with a sneer—show your teaching."

Scrambling up in confusion, the party started for the house. But on the way Elizabeth Hampton found time to whisper to Dorothy Stanfield, "If he were a gentleman, Dorothy, Sir John would not be betrothed."

May Percy started with the rest, but in a moment returned to get her forgotten glove. She came back into the cloud world of romance. Pierre was playing softly on his harp, a dreary, mournful melody, the farewell. With his eyes bent down, Dubarre still stood beside the table. And as she watched him he raised his head, sighed, and the pieces of the broken wineglass fell at his feet.

"M. Dubarre"—he started and whirled her—"have you—have you"—she stammered painfully—"have you seen my glove? I dropped one somewhere."

In a flash Dubarre had spied it under his right at the table.

"Ah, monsieur, you have it. Thank you."

He held the glove toward her silently. She started to take it, and he drew back his hand a little.

"Mademoiselle, can you? May I? Is there not some little ray, one token just for the hopeless one, the outcast?"

She looked at him, half frightened, all sorrowful. "Yes," she said, speaking slowly and started away, looking back. "Yes," he repeated, and again, "Y-e-s."

He watched her until she was gone from sight. Then he raised the glove to his lips and kissed it passionately, repeatedly.

The farewell was ended.

Pierre coughed and came from behind the tree. Dubarre hastily hid the glove in his breast, then turned that way.

"Pierre, we leave for France in the morning."

CHAPTER VI.

THERE was not in the dancing master's room. Within a minute after entering Fourney had seen all the room offered. With quick, accustomed glances he noted that the door through which he came afforded the only external exit. The one just opposite in the other wall opened only into a closet. Beside it he saw that the big eight day clock which reached from the floor almost to the door top showed just the hour of 6. On the right wall as he entered he swept over the only window, on one side of the fireplace took in that, and the tester bed on the other. He could have told the wood of the table placed near the clock and the design of the three chairs or have one brass andiron in the fireplace had been polished more than the other. It was a quick eye took that strange muddle, chased from France by "no leetle Corsican."

Now Fourney had been in the room two hours, and he was heartily tired of it. His cousin Jean mused in one corner of the fireplace. Pierre, brushing some dust off Dubarre's clothes, was no great company. Fourney had begun to grow sleepy. He leaned back in his chair, yawned and looked at the clock.

To show the time pass in no counter? It was more a question than anything else. Pierre, still busy with the brush, replied in kind.

"You are from no city—from Paris?"

"Non, Normandie."

"Parlez vous Francais?" asked Pierre abruptly. The suddenness of such a foolish question apparently confused Fourney.

"Non, non," he said; "that is, not parlez well."

The other's lifted eyebrows and wondering shrugs were marvels of their kind.

"A Frenchman not parlez Francaise?" he said.

"Me half French," explained Fourney.

"Oh, ho!" And the way of saying it made the half Frenchman squirm.

"Other half Anglais," he continued, eager to explain.

"Mon Dieu!" muttered Pierre.

"Ah you?" asked Fourney. The servant brushing clothes looked at him wide, heard [illegible] in belle France, chased by no leetle corporal. He hate us. We poor comrades—its those comrades who came before. We fit them, then we be so happy."

It was Fourney's story told over again. The man who had told it first smiled. He saw the irony, but he was equal to the occasion.

"We two—you two—alike," he cried with enthusiasm. "Let us be four—all in one." Pierre stopped brushing Dubarre's coat and appeared to be weighing the proposition seriously.

"That's nice," he murmured. Then, hesitatingly, "If you could [illegible] French."

Fourney rushed to vindicate himself fully now. "Father French. Used to teach so music and so fencing to Anglais. He marry, live in England till he die. Then me take up classes. Two years ago I get letter from my cousin Jean Fourney, in France. He [illegible] speech. I go over to help him. We live on leetle farm in Normandie."

"Ah!" interrupted his listener, as though greatly relieved.

Jacques Fourney continued: "People run so away. May I Anglais. Angleis say I French. We be French refugees do Anglais. Exchange of [illegible] Voila!" He ended with a shrug.

Big Pierre stretched his coat in most contented style, all the while smiling approval and slyness over and over again: "Ah! Oui, oui!" Then he went back to his clothes brushing.

Fourney asked the next question.

"You been long run away from France?"

Immediately the hairdist became too excited to talk straight English.

"Long?" he cried. "Ah, ma foi! Much better for if we had not been away so long."

"You mean you been a long time here?" questioned the disgusted Fourney.

Pierre broke in with admiration. "Ah, you have a Frenchman. Here, mine to talk two Anglais, French—both well." The completeness of apology and admiration in his tone was wonderful.

After that there was silence for a time. The hairdist lifted the dancing master's coat and began to shake it. As he did so a heavy ring dropped out upon the floor. With a quick "Mon Dieu!" muttered under his breath, Pierre began to search about for the ring. He brought a candle from the light wanted to help him. Fourney sat back in his chair and looked on with indifference. His companion, Jean, had waked up very suddenly. Now and then, when Pierre's back was turned, the pair would look quickly at each other. Pierre was too interested in his search to notice.

"Why, there it is by my leg of me is like!" cried Fourney at last from his chair. He had seen the light gleam on the gold. Pierre snatched up the ring joyfully.

"Mon Dieu, me glad!" he cried, as though immensely relieved; then added in explanatory tone: "A present from the Anglaise mademoiselle he teach the minuet. He would no lose it. I put it away." And he slipped the ring back in the waistcoat pocket from which it had fallen. Then he went over, opened the closet door and hung the waistcoat inside.

"Ma foi! If I lose it he break my back."

"He like mademoiselle?"

"He teach her," replied Pierre diplomatically.

"Mademoiselle—great lady," ventured Fourney.

"She—a Percy," answered Dubarre's man proudly.

"Far above poor French dancing master."

"Or French minute teacher," was the quick reply.

"French blood—good as blood of Anglais," said Fourney.

"Diable! Yes."

"There be a French Percy. I hear of him."

"You are from no city—from Paris?"

Pierre's face became pained.

"A French Percy?" he questioned.

"Yes. Jean saw him once. He come with soldiers. He far brave."

Pierre put his hand to his ear and [illegible]

"Oui, oui, monsieur; I come!" he cried. Then, snatching up a coat from among those lying on the table, which happened to be a coat of Fourney's, he rushed out through the door, slipping on the garment as he ran. The two men left in the room looked after him in [illegible]. Then they looked at each other.

"Well, I'll be curst!" exclaimed the dumbfounded Fourney.

Jacques Fourney turned quickly to the supposed dumb man. "Are you sure, Jean—sure?"

"Yes, sure," cried the assistant eagerly. "The smaller one he is Percy, Lieutenant. I saw him in France when he was awarded the cross of the Legion for [illegible]"

"Then the 500 guineas reward and the £100 offered by Wellington are ours," exclaimed Fourney.

"Not till we get the soldiers and have him arrested," answered his practical assistant.

"We'll go now," declared Fourney. "My French won't stand the strain longer."

"Our going might make him suspicious," objected Jean.

"Pshaw! By starting now we can have the soldiers here before noon to-morrow. He can't get far by then. Let us leave through the window before that Jean Pierre gets back. If he suspected, the fighter Percy would kill us both."

Quickly they prepared to go. Pierre had taken Jacques Fourney's coat, so the spy appropriated one belonging to Dubarre.

As they were leaving Jean paused. "That ring," he said and got it from the waistcoat hanging in the closet. Fourney looked at it.

"That's proof enough," he cried, "the St. Croix seal!" And, putting the ring in his pocket, Fourney led the way out through the window.

Pierre had some difficulty in finding the dancing master. He ran all the way to the gibbet, then was compelled to wait, for Dubarre stood talking to Captain Thorneliffe and could not be disturbed. At last the hairdist, nearly consumed now in the fever of his own impatience, got his chance to tell of the strange Frenchmen he had left in the room.

I will be at the above appointments, with the exception of the last ten days at Clanton, which the law does not require of me.

L. B. POUNDS, Tax Assessor.

You can't be healthy if you have a weak, unhealthy, tired out stomach. Neither can you feel good if by some little irregularity in eating you have caused the stomach to get out of order. These little stomach troubles are signs of indigestion, which may and very often does turn into a very bad case of dyspepsia. Don't allow this to go on a single day without doing something to overcome it. Take some good reasonable and safe digestant like KODOL for dyspepsia. KODOL is the best remedy known today for heartburn, belching and all troubles arising from a disordered digestion. It is pleasant to take and affords relief promptly. Sold by Upchurch Drug co.

Giving Him a Chance.

Mrs. Wilson's husband was often obliged to go to New York on business and frequently did not reach his home until the arrival of the midnight train. Mrs. Wilson had been in the habit of sleeping peacefully at these times without fear, but a number of burglaries in the neighborhood during one of her husband's trips to New York had disturbed her calm.

On the night of his return Mr. Wilson was stealing carefully up the front stairs, as was his wont on such occasions, so that his wife would not be awakened, when he heard her voice, high and strained.

"I don't know whether you are my husband or a burglar," came the excited voice, "but I am going to be on the safe side and shoot, so if you are Henry you'd better get out of the way!"—Youth's Companion.

A Lesson in Language.

A regular Mr. Malaprop recently came home from his first visit to Europe. He grew enthusiastic about Rome.

"It was fine," he declared, "to go into them churches over there and see the old tombs—cigarophagusses, they call 'em. And then the Sixteen chapel is great, and as for the Vaccination, where the pope lives, Vell!"

But his stock of compliments gave out when he got to the subject of beggars.

"I always refused them pennies," he said, "because, you see, I didn't want to set a bad precedent."—New York Times.

Not So Many.

They went in to dinner together. He was very bashful, and she tried in vain to draw him out. Finally she began to talk books, and he became expansive. "And Hugo?" she asked. "Do you like his style?" "Oh, yes," he replied; "I find him intensely interesting. I've read a number of his books." Then she asked, "Have you read 'Ninety-three?'" "No, I've—er—only read three. I didn't know he had written so many."

THERE'S NO USE talking, you can't beat Herbine for the liver. The greatest regulater ever offered to suffering humanity. If you suffer from liver complaint, if you are bilious and fretful, its your liver, and Herbine will put it in its proper condition. A positive cure for Constipation, Biliousness, Dyspepsia and all ills due to a torpid liver. Try a bottle and you will never use anything else. Sold by Upchurch Drug co, Clanton; A Horn, Thorsby.

FARM HINTS.

...So far as possible everything should be put in good condition for the winter. The cows should be put in the stable nights, where they can be better fed and cared for. The stable should be put in the best condition for the, both for the comfort of the cows or other animals and convenience in caring for them. Have good doors and sufficient [illegible] light. Put in more windows when needed and there is room. Make the stable comfortably warm, but have sufficient ventilation, so that the air shall not be close or foul. [illegible]

The health of the animals should always be carefully looked after. A yearly application of whitewash will add to the good looks of the stable and be considered a necessary expense.

There should always be an endeavor to have everything as convenient as possible for cleanliness during the cold weather, as the comfort would during the rainy weather or colder days [illegible]

Implements and Machines.

With the great scarcity of help the farmer finds it necessary to supply the deficiency so far as possible by the use of the best implements and machines. It costs a good deal on the average sized farm to get supplied with these, and they should be made the best use of and then well cleaned and housed.

POPULAR PEARS.

Two Varieties That Are Much Valued by Orchardists.

The Bartlett pear, an old time favorite, is of English origin. It is one of the few really good pears that grow everywhere. When fully ripe it is delicious. The flesh is white, buttery, juicy and of a musky perfume.

For canning purposes it is prized, and in commercial use it is said that the Keiffer is largely substituted and sold as Bartlett. The Keiffer is described as being raised from the seed of the Chinese sand pear accidentally crossed with Bartlett or some other kind. The flesh of the Keiffer is slightly coarse, juicy, with a pronounced quince flavor. It ripens in October and will keep for some time. Some fine specimens of Bartlett pears are here shown in the cut from American Agriculturist.

Movable Henhouses.

Here in Newport county, R. I., the most successful hen men house their birds in small movable buildings.

We have learned by experience to build small, cheap houses of cull lumber on skids. Place them twenty-five to fifty feet apart in rows and move them as often as need be a few feet on to clean ground, says a writer in Rural New Yorker. The grass and weeds will spring up and purify the ground long before it will be time to cover it again. Cement blocks may be cheap for a permanent building, but I can see but few situations where it would be best to use them for henhouses.

A Windbreak.

A windbreak consists of one or two rows of trees planted primarily for the purpose of checking the force of the wind. The term "shelter belt" is applied to larger groups of trees which form forest conditions and serve a protective purpose. Any species which is adapted to the region may be used for windbreaks. Where evergreens will succeed, however, they are more desirable, since they afford better winter protection than deciduous trees. A windbreak consisting of a single row should be composed of a densely growing species, with branches close to the ground.

Charcoal For Hogs.

Hogs that are getting a good deal of corn ought to have access either to charcoal or to coal slack, says a writer in Iowa Homestead. It is surprising how much slack a bunch of hogs will eat if it is mixed with a little salt, and our idea has always been that they would not eat it if their systems did not demand it.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson VIII.—Fourth Quarter, For Nov. 24, 1907.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Rom. xiv, 10-23. Memory Verses, 19-21—Golden Text, Rom. xiv, 13—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1907, by American Press Association.]

How wonderfully beautiful is the outcome of this marvelous book! Last week in the "land of Judges" we saw the necessity of a continuous life and a clear testimony, with our eyes ever upon our Leader, and in a previous lesson, the objective—even an ambition how great things He has done for us and owns Him in eternity and truth. Now we pass over to the New Testament epistle for a lesson, and it is to continue Christ as our Judge that we may deal well and live unto Him, waiting to deliver others from the great enemy, the oppressor and destroyer, and hasten the reign of Christ in righteousness on this earth.

It is still the world's night, and people are living in rioting and drunkenness, and the children of God seem to be asleep, as Jonah was when the sailors were calling upon their gods, but the time of the kingdom is ever growing nearer, and it behooves the child of God to [illegible] and make not provision for the flesh to fulfill the lusts thereof (Rom. xiii, 11-14).

We can neither convert the world, nor reform society from without, but will go to that of His coming again, and will begin in Himself (Heb. ix, 28; I xiii, 1-2, 3)—but we can by faithfully abandon ourselves to that life which He has purposed, [illegible] every believer would, in view of the fact that all believers must appear before the judgment seat of Christ, ardently covet of us give account of himself to God, lay to heart and live out the words of verse 8, "Whether we live we live unto the Lord, and whether we die we die unto the Lord; whether we live, therefore, or die, we are the Lord's," we and others through us would be greatly blessed and used in blessing. I do not know how to account for the unbelief of, and the ill treatment the word of God receives from, many preachers, professors in theological seminaries and innumerable members of churches unless it be that they ignore the judgment seat of Christ, where every believer shall give account of himself to God. Compare II Cor. v, 10, 11; I Cor. iii, 12-15.

The sin of judging others may not seem to be as great as the sin of intemperance, yet both is an abomination as plain as "be not drunk with wine." "Let us not therefore judge one another any more" (Rom. v, 13 and context verse 12). Compare Matt. vii, 1, and I Cor. iv, 5, "Judge not that ye be not judged" and "Judge nothing before the time until the Lord come," and let us learn to obey. This talk of doing as we please and not being responsible for the weaknesses of others is wholly selfish and intemperate and most unChristlike, for "even Christ pleased not Himself" (Rom. xv, 3). If our thought is to win men to Christ, "by all means to save some" (I Cor. ix, 22), we will not think of pleasing ourselves. It seems to me that our lives as followers of Jesus Christ will be holy or otherwise in proportion to our knowledge of the kingdom of God (verse 17). The kingdom of God for which we pray when we say "Thy kingdom come!" is nothing less than the will of God done on earth as in heaven and will be a reality after our Lord has been reigning a thousand years and has subdued all things to Himself, the last enemy, death, having been destroyed (I Cor. xv, 25-28). If the hastening of this kingdom is our first aim, according to Matt. vi, 33, we may be sure that He will see to our having sufficient food and raiment, as He promised.

All classes of unrighteous people, including drunkards (I Cor. vi, 9-11), are excluded as such from the kingdom, but there is righteousness for them also if they will turn from their sins and receive the Lord Jesus as their Saviour. He has made peace for all by the blood of His cross (Col. i, 20), and there is no one who may not have His righteousness and peace and joy. If we who have these gifts by His grace are thinking more of our own enjoyment of them than of helping others to receive them and instead of commending Him and them are found disputing about what we consider our rights in the matter of eating and drinking, how dwelleth the love of God in us? If we are right with God, our question will not be may I do this or that, but how can I win some one to Christ, and if we think that anything, however lawful for us, will prove a hindrance or stumbling block to some weak one we will for Christ's sake and for the other's sake gladly refrain.

Our hearts will tell us quickly if the thing is quite right in the sight of God. "If our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart and knoweth all things; if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God (I John iii, 20-22, and verse 23 of the lesson). The main topic of the Bible is love, and "love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law" (xiii, 10). If around the world on this so called world's temperance Sunday there could be a worldwide proclamation of the love of God in Christ Jesus to all sinners and His readiness to give righteousness, peace and joy to all through that precious blood, what a great day it might be.

INVISIBLE ENEMIES.

A Few of Sundry That Elude the Ordinary Person's Eye.

The fact that modern life rarely runs even while they are stationary than the ground upon the mind of the writer one day while walking for a train out of small station in New Jersey. A marshy retreat, where a small stream flowed under the junction of the railway and a well traveled public road, seemed a favorable place for them. The stream was still up without warning, which supported the approach to the bridge had a southern exposure. The whole afforded ample hiding place, and the ready breeders of the swamps promised good hunting for the species which live upon small fish, frogs, toads and earthworms.

The Engineer, who for several years had passed his hours a day at his leisurely occupation there, denied that there were millions in the vicinity. "No more than there be in Ireland, sir" he said, "and we are ready to swear that there be if there ain't." He asserted. But a few minutes' search in the gardens and grass revealed four specimens which had been under his very nose all the time. A frog, a fly, a fly and a moth [illegible] with water. A very fragrant pink thistle [illegible] the [illegible] fly, four stocks of grain, many of which would [illegible] symbolical of the sight of a warfare, exhibits to pass without three feet of the well attentive reader that they are working with a [illegible] day of prosperity—Francis Metcalfe in Owing Magazine.

Coffee Gossip.

Hive's breath brings the animals, a tendency to clothe themselves in colors that resembles the prevailing hues of their surroundings. There is another question for scientists who have discovered that different colors produce different effects on the health and disposition of individuals. At all events color preferences in different parts of the world are decidedly at a variance. For example, while we the [illegible] in mourning the Chinese wear white [illegible] while [illegible] while the on their coat. The royal color in Europe is purple—a hue of mulberry, [illegible] often misrepresented. In China the imperial color is yellow, and a certain shade of yellow may not be worn by the common people, but is conferred upon high officials as a great distinction.

Some individual color preferences are historical. Cleopatra loved yellow; Mme. de Pompadour delighted in a charming mixture of pink and blue; Napoleon's first empress, Josephine, wore the daring combination of black, white and emerald green, while Empress Eugenie boldly declares that—

Any color, as long as it's red,
Is good enough for me.

Shopping Habits in Japan.

Even in shopping Japan they have bargain hours, but they conduct them on very different principles from the scrimmages we have over here. An amusing American woman has embodied her experiences of traveling alone in Japan in a most entertaining volume just published, whence may be gathered a description of a sale at the greatest trading house in Japan.

The goods are not flung about. They are shown to advantage in locked cases, and the heads of departments keep the keys. Salesmen, however, are laid on mats, and, though there is keen anxiety to secure bargains, perfect order and quiet prevail.

Babies toddle about quite comfortably, others sleep on their mothers' backs. However orderly and quiet though the Japanese bargain sale may be, it is not free from the shoplifter, and it is interesting to hear that the detective is as necessary in the flowery land as in England. The kimono sleeve is a handy receptacle for unconsidered

ALWAYS WAS SICK.

When a man says he always was sick—troubled with a cough that lasted all winter—what would you think if he should say—he never was sick since using Ballard's Horehound Syrup. Such a man exists.

Mr. J. C. Clark, Denver, Colorado, writes: "For years I was troubled with a severe cough that would last all winter. This cough left me in a miserable condition. I tried Ballard's Horehound Syrup and have not had a sick day since. That's what it did for me." Sold by Upchurch Drug co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thoreby.

"I believe with the Scriptures," began the captain, "that he who captureth a woman's heart is greater than he that taketh a city."

"Did Lord Byron or Sir Walter Scott write your Bible, captain?" asked Mistress Stanfield. But the soldier was imperious to assault.

"And I will add," he continued, with a meaning glance at Ethel Courtleigh, "great is the woman who will allow her heart to be captured. And so—and so—I will drink a health to those who have so closely followed the Scriptures, and may they always show their wisdom and—and—er—magnanimity, as they have done on this occasion."

The captain gave place to James Bate amid cheers and laughter.

"Upon my word, I ought to say something," he began. "I know I ought—I ought, but I cannot think of it. We should all be glad, I dare say—don't you think we should all—that is, you and I—all of us"—

"A handsome pair, eh, James?" suggested Sir Henry.

"Yes, I don't know—oh, yes, of course—that is, no"—He cleared his throat, then paused for a moment, silent, awkward. "It's embarrassing to the devil"—

The captain coughed violently. James Bate stood, not knowing what to do. The others laughed.

Suddenly from behind the tree at the left appeared Dubarre. In five quick strides he had reached the far end of the table. His head was high, his body erect. It was not the dancing master, but a suffering-made gentleman among his peers, who came magnanimously to add his congratulations to the rest. By comparison the exquisite opposite was mere awkward, more silly, than ever. The guests looked up astounded.

"Pardon, monsieur." And, with the air of a French gentleman, Dubarre reached over and took Sir John Willmerding's wineglass. Then he stepped back so as to face May Percy and the rest.

"May a poor Frenchman, an intruder, add his humble toast to mademoiselle?" he asked.

Sir Henry half rose, but the girl bowed without speaking, and he subsided.

Next, as silent, breathless at his audacity, they watched him, Dubarre raised his glass:

"To the Lady of Moods.
"To the Countess of Grace.
"To the Duchess of Gayety.
"To the Queen of Courtesy.
"To the Empress of Hearts.
"To the Goddess of Love.

"To her whose beauty now, like a mountain torrent from above, rushes o'er.

"Next, as the thoughtful pool at the heart of nature, woos one;

"Whose courtesy is the constant, sweet picturing of her heart's innocence;

"The purity of whose soul, shining from midnight eyes, would shame the whitest moonlight;

"Whose Alpine courage and goodness tower above the clouds of men's understanding;

"Whose wit, as sun's rays flashing on those snow clad heights, dazzles, but does not wound;

"Whose moods are as the snowflakes, infinite, yet each its very own;

"Whose love, as that snow, pure and undefiled, rests high, secure on the mountain of her trust;

"Whose whole self is God's expression of perfect joy to man.

"To her, then, whom, seeing, man must say, 'I have followed marsh lights, but now the evening star; henceforth I follow no more marsh lights.'"

He paused a moment, then added, with deepest loving reverence:

"To Mistress Percy. God bless her!"

He drank and, as in the groom's toast, snapped off the stem of the glass. Then he stood looking down silently at the pieces in his hand. And in his face could be read plainly what the broken glass meant to him.

With an exclamation of oath, Sir John started up from his seat. Mistress Percy laid a restraining hand on his arm, and he sat down again. At the foot of the table Sir Henry Percy sprang to his feet.

"Have done! Have done!" the squire cried. "'Tis time for the dance. Come, sir, get on with it," added it with a sneer—"show your teaching."

Scrambling up in confusion, the party started for the house. But as the way narrowed Stanfield stood aside to whisper to Dorothy Stanfield, "If he were a gentleman, Dorothy, Sir John would not be betrothed."

May Percy started with the rest, but in a moment returned to get her forgotten glove. She came back into the cloud world of romance. Pierre was playing softly on his harp, a dreary, mournful melody, the farewell. With his eyes bent down, Dubarre still stood beside the table. And as she watched him he raised his head, sighed, and the pieces of the broken wineglass fell at his feet.

"M. Dubarre"—he started and whirled her—"have you—have you"—she stammered painfully—"have you seen my glove? I dropped one somewhere."

In a flash Dubarre had spied it under the edge of the table.

"Ah, mademoiselle, you have it. Thank you."

He held the glove toward her silently. She started to take it, and he drew back his hand a little.

"Mademoiselle, can you? May I? Is there not some little sign, one token just for the hopeless one, the hopeless one, the outcast?"

She looked at him, half frightened, all sorrowful. "Yes," she said, speaking slowly and started away, looking back. "Yes," he repeated, and again, "Y-e-s."

He watched her until she was gone from sight. Then he raised the glove to his lips and kissed it passionately, repeatedly.

The farewell was ended.

Pierre coughed and came from behind the tree. Dubarre hastily hid the glove in his breast, then turned that way.

"Pierre, we leave for France in the morning."

CHAPTER VI.

THERE was no fire in the dancing master's room. Within a minute after entering Fourney had seen all the room offered. With quick, accustomed glances he noted that the door through which he came afforded the only normal exit. The one just opposite in the other wall opened only into a closet. Beside it he saw that the big eight day clock which reached from the floor almost to the door top showed just the hour of 6. On the right wall as he entered he swept over the only window, on one side of the fireplace rock faithful, and the tester bed on the other. He could have told the weed of the table placed near the desk and the design of the three chairs or how one brass andiron in the fireplace had been polished more than the other. It was a quick eye that the strange swordsman, exiled from France by "no lootle Corsican."

Now Fourney had been in the room two hours, and he was heartily tired of it. His cousin Jean sneezed in the corner of the fireplace. Pierre, brushing long coats of Dubarre's clothes, was no great company. Fourney had begun to grow sleepy. He leaned back in his chair, yawned and looked at the clock.

"So slow its time pass in so country?" It was more a question than anything else. Pierre, still busy with the brush, replied in kind.

"You are from no city—from Paris?"

"Non, Normandie."

"Parlez vous Francais?" asked Pierre abruptly. The suddenness of such a foolish question apparently confused Fourney.

"Non, non," he said; "that is, not parley well."

The other's lifted eyebrows and wondering shrugs were marvels of their kind.

"A Frenchman not parley French?" he said.

"Me half French," explained Fourney.

"Ah, oui!" And the way of saying it made the half Frenchman squirm.

"Other half English," he continued, eager to explain.

"Mon Dieu!" muttered Pierre.

"Ah, you?" asked Fourney. The servant brushing clothes looked at him a little, heard [illegible] in belle France, cursed by no lootle corporal. He hate us. We seek comrades—his [illegible] who came before. We fix them, then we be so happy."

It was Fourney's story told over again. The man who had told it first smiled. He saw the irony, but he was equal to the occasion.

"We two—you two—alike," he cried with enthusiasm. "Let us in fore-all in one." Pierre stopped brushing Dubarre's coat and appeared to be weighing the proposition seriously.

"That's nice," he murmured. Then, hesitatingly, "If you could [illegible] Francais?"

Fourney rushed to vindicate himself fully now. "Father Dutch. Come to teach me music and so fencing to Anglais. He marry, live in England till he die. Then me take up classes. Two years ago I get letter from my cousin Jean Fourney, in France. He lose his speech. I go over to help him. We live on lootle farm in Normandie."

"Ah!" interrupted his listener, as though greatly relieved.

Jacques Fourney continued: "People run us away. May I Anglais. Anglais say I French. We be French refugees to Anglais. Parlez vous Francais? Voila!" He ended with a shrug.

But Pierre stretched his head in most contented style, all the while emitting appreciative sniffs and saying over and over again: "Ah! Oui, oui!" Then he went back to his clothes brushing.

Fourney asked the next question.

"You been long run away from France?"

Immediately the harpist became too excited to talk straight English.

"Long?" he cried. "Ah, sacre fol! Much longer can if we had not been away so long."

"You mean you been a long time here?" questioned the disgusted Fourney.

Pierre looked at him with childish love. "Ah, yes, oui. I Frenchman. Have mine to talk two—Anglais, French—both well." The combination of apology and admiration in his tone was wonderful.

After that there was silence for a time. The instant that the dancing master's coat slid began to shake it. As he did so a heavy ring dropped out upon the floor. With a quick "Mon Dieu!" muttered under his breath, Pierre began to search about for the ring. He brought a candle from the hall vainly to help him. Fourney sat back in his chair and looked on with indifference. His companion, Jean, had waked up very suddenly. Now and then, when Pierre's back was turned, the pair would look quickly at each other. Pierre was too interested in his search to notice.

"Why, there it is by an leg of my lit-tle!" cried Fourney at last from his chair. He had seen the light gleam on the gold. Pierre snatched up the ring joyfully.

"Mon Dieu, me glad!" he cried as though immensely relieved; then added in explanatory tone: "A present from the Anglais mademoiselle he teach the minuet. He would no lose it, I put it away." And he slipped the ring back in the waistcoat pocket from which it had fallen. Then he went over, opened the closet door and hung the waistcoat inside.

"Ma foi! If I lose it he break my back."

"He like mademoiselle?"

"He teach her," replied Pierre diplomatically.

"Mademoiselle—great lady," ventured Fourney.

"She—a Percy," answered Dubarre's man proudly.

"Far above poor French dancing master."

"Or French music teacher," was the quick reply.

"French blood—good—as blood of Anglais," said Jacques.

"Diable! Yes."

"There be a Captain Percy. I hear of him."

"You are from no city—from Paris?" Pierre's face became pained.

"A French Percy?" he questioned.

"Yes, Jean saw him once. He come with soldiers. He ver brave."

Pierre put his hand to his ear and stood listening intently.

"Oui, oui, monsieur; I come!" he cried. Then, snatching up a coat from among those lying on the table, which happened to be a coat of Fourney's, he rushed out through the door, slipping on the garment as he ran. The two men left in the room looked after him in mute surprise. Then they looked at each other.

"Well, I'll be curst!" exclaimed the dumbfounded Fourney.

Jacques Fourney turned quickly to the supposed dumb man. "Are you sure, John Jarvis?"

"Yes, sure," cried the assistant eagerly. "That man—you be in Percy, Lord Staple. I saw him in France when he was awarded the cross of the Legion for stabbing one dragoon plenty."

"Then the 500 guineas reward and the £100 offered by Wellington are ours," exclaimed Fourney.

"Not till we get the soldiers and have him arrested," answered his practical assistant.

"We'll go now," declared Fourney. "My French won't stand the strain longer."

"Our going might make him suspicious," objected Jean.

"Pshaw! By starting now we can have the soldiers here before noon tomorrow. He can't get far by then. Let us leave through the window before that man Pierre gets back. If he suspected, the fighter Percy would kill us both."

Quickly they prepared to go. Pierre had taken Jacques Fourney's coat, so he coolly appropriated one belonging to Dubarre.

As they were leaving, Jean paused. "That ring," he said and got it from the waistcoat hanging in the closet. Fourney looked at it.

"That's proof enough," he cried, "the St. Croix seal!" And, putting the ring in his pocket, Fourney left the way out through the window.

Pierre had some difficulty in finding the dancing master. He ran all the way to the garden, then was compelled to wait, for Dubarre stood talking to Captain Thorneley and could not be disturbed. At last the harpist, nearly consumed now in the fever of his own impatience, got his chance to tell of the strange Frenchmen he had left in the room.

I will be at all the above appointments, with the exception of the last ten days at Clanton, which the law does not require of me.

L. B. POUNDS, Tax Assessor.

You can't be healthy if you have a weak, unhealthy, tired out stomach. Neither can you feel good if by some little irregularity in eating you have caused the stomach to get out of order. These little stomach troubles are signs of indigestion, which may and very often does lead into a very bad case of dyspepsia. Don't allow this to go on a single day without doing something to overcome it. Take some good reasonable and safe digestant like KODOL for dyspepsia. KODOL is the best remedy known today for heartburn, belching and all troubles arising from a disordered digestion. It is pleasant to take and affords relief promptly. Sold by Upchurch Drug co.

Giving Him a Chance.

Mrs. Wilson's husband was often obliged to go to New York on business and frequently did not reach his home until the arrival of the midnight train. Mrs. Wilson had been in the habit of sleeping peacefully at these times without fear, but a number of burglaries in the neighborhood during one of her husband's trips to New York had disturbed her calm.

On the night of his return Mr. Wilson was stealing carefully up the front stairs, as was his wont on such occasions, so that his wife would not be wakened, when he heard her voice, high and strained.

"I don't know whether you are my husband or a burglar," came the excited voice, "but I am going to be on the safe side and shoot, so if you are Henry you'd better get out of the way!"—Youth's Companion.

A Lesson in Language.

A regular Mr. Malaprop recently came home from his first visit to Europe. He grew enthusiastic about Rome.

"It was fine," he declared, "to go into them churches over there and see the old tombs—cigarophagenes, they call 'em. And then the Sixteen chapel is great, and as for the Vaccination, where the pope lives, you"—

But his stock of complimentary gave out when he got to the subject of beggars.

"I always refused them pennies," he said, "because, you see, I didn't want to set a bad precedent!"—New York Times.

Not So Many.

They went in to dinner together. He was very bashful, and she tried in vain to draw him out. Finally she began to talk books, and he became responsive. "And Hugo?" she asked. "Do you like his style?" "Oh, yes," he replied; "I find him intensely interesting. I've read a number of his books." Then she asked, "Have you read 'Ninety-three?'" "No, I've—er—only read three. I didn't know he had written so many."

FARM HINTS.

Management of Horses.

So far as possible everything should be put in good condition for the winter. The cows should be put in the stable nights, where they can be better fed and cared for. The stable should be put in the best condition for man, both for the comfort of the cows or other animals and convenience in caring for them. Have good doors and sufficient quantity of light. Put in more windows when needed and there is room. Make the stable comfortably warm, but have sufficient means for ventilation, so that the air shall not be close or foul anywhere.

The health of the animals should always be carefully looked after. A timely application of whitewash will add to the good looks of the stable and is considered a sanitary measure.

There should always be an endeavor to have everything in the convenient arrangement for those having the care of the stock, as that means much during the rainy months of winter or the busy time of spring.

Care of Tools.

Prices for milk, cream and butter are high, very high for the time of the year, and may go higher and continue high through the winter. This presents another opportunity for farmers to do the best possible for their farms to keep up a good line of stock. Keeping the worst in the stable on poor subjects and carefully cull the stock preparatory to the winter season.

No time, incidentally, for waste, when work is pressing, and yet there is no time in which it is more likely to occur. The plenty of the harvest season, the rush of the work, the desire to get through with it, the fact that the implements are in constant use, all contribute to the waste. Even the best implements and machines will not last long if they are not properly cared for. Keep them under cover when not in use, and see that they are not left in the field or meadow. Implements and machines that are left out in the rain will soon rust and become worthless. Keep them in a dry place, and when they are not in use, and see that they are not left in the field or meadow. Implements and machines that are left out in the rain will soon rust and become worthless. Keep them in a dry place, and when they are not in use, and see that they are not left in the field or meadow.

Implements and Machines.

With the great scarcity of help the farmer finds it necessary to supply the deficiency so far as possible by the use of the best implements and machines. It costs a good deal on the average sized farm to get supplied with these, and they should be made the best use of and then well cleaned and housed.

POPULAR PEARS.

Two Varieties That Are Much Valued by Orchardists.

The Bartlett pear, an old time favorite, is of English origin. It is one of the few really good pears that grow everywhere. When fully ripe it is delicious. The flesh is white, buttery, juicy and of a musky perfume.

For canning purposes it is prized, and in commercial use it is said that the Keiffer is largely substituted and sold as Bartlett. The Keiffer is described as being raised from the seed of the Chinese sand pear accidentally crossed with Bartlett or some other kind. The flesh of the Keiffer is slightly coarse, juicy, with a pronounced quince flavor. It ripens in October and will keep for some time. Some fine specimens of Bartlett pears are here shown in the cut from American Agriculturist.

BARTLETT PEARS.

Movable Henhouse.

Here in Newport county, R. I., the most successful hen men house their birds in small movable buildings.

We have learned by experience to build small, cheap houses of cull lumber on skids. Place them twenty-five to fifty feet apart in rows and move them as often as need be a few feet on to clean ground, says a writer in Rural New Yorker. The grass and weeds will spring up and purify the ground long before it will be time to cover it again. Cement blocks may be cheap for a permanent building, but I can see but few situations where it would be best to use them for henhouses.

A Windbreak.

A windbreak consists of one or two rows of trees planted primarily for the purpose of checking the force of the wind. The term "shelter belt" is applied to larger groups of trees which form forest conditions and serve a protective purpose. Any species which is adapted to the region may be used for windbreaks. Where evergreens will succeed, however, they are more desirable, since they afford better winter protection than deciduous trees. A windbreak consisting of a single row should be composed of a densely growing species, with branches close to the ground.

Charcoal For Hogs.

Hogs that are getting a good deal of corn ought to have access either to charcoal or to coal slack, says a writer in Iowa Homestead. It is surprising how much slack a bunch of hogs will eat if it is mixed with a little salt, and our idea has always been that they would not eat it if their systems did not demand it.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson VIII.—Fourth Quarter, For Nov. 24, 1907.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Rom. xiv, 12-23. Memory Verses, 19-21—Golden Text, Rom. xiv, 19—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1907, by American Press Association.]

How wonderfully beautiful is the oneness of this marvelous book! Last week in the "Land of Judges" we saw the necessity of a conformist life and a clear conscience, with our eyes ever upon our Leader, and in a previous lesson, the celebration over an overdue love, great things He has done for us and given Him in eternity and truth. Now we pass over to the New Testament epistle for a lesson, and it is to consider Christ as our Judge that we may duly fall and live unto Him, seeking to deliver others from that great enemy, the opposer and depreciator, and hasten the reign of Christ in righteousness on this earth.

It is still the world's night and people are living in rioting and drunkenness, and the children of God seem to be asleep, as Jonah was when the sailors were calling their gods, but the time of the kingdom is ever growing nearer, and it becomes the duty of God to "put on the Lord Jesus Christ and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof" (Rom. xiii, 11-14).

We can neither convert this world nor remove iniquity from it, nor will we to that at His coming again, and will begin at Israel (Isa. ix, 7; lxii, 1, 2)—but we can by daily abandon ourselves to Him that He may accomplish in and through us that which He has purposed, if every believer would, in view of the fact that all believers must appear before the judgment seat of Christ and every one of us give account of himself to God, lay to heart and live out the words of verse 8, "Whether we live we live unto the Lord, and whether we die we die unto the Lord; whether we live, therefore, or die we are the Lord's." We add others through us would be greatly blessed and made a blessing. I do not know how to account for the unbelief of, and the ill treatment the word of God receives from, many preachers, professors in theological seminaries and innumerable members of churches unless it be that they ignore the judgment seat of Christ, where every believer shall give account of himself to God. Compare II Cor. v, 10, 11; I Cor. iii, 13-15.

The sin of judging others may not seem to be as great as the sin of intemperance, yet here is an exhortation as plain as "be not drunk with wine," "Let us not therefore judge one another any more" (Rom. v, 13, and hence verse 13). Compare Matt. vii, 1, and I Cor. iv, 5, "Judge not that ye be not judged" and "Judge nothing before the time until the Lord come," and let us learn to obey. This talk of doing as we please and not being responsible for the weaknesses of others is wholly selfish and intemperate and most unChristlike, for "even Christ pleased not Himself" (Rom. xv, 3). If our thought is to win men to Christ, "by all means to save some" (I Cor. ix, 22), we will not think of pleasing ourselves. It seems to me that our lives as followers of Jesus Christ will be holy or otherwise in proportion to our knowledge of the kingdom of God (verse 17). The kingdom of God for which we pray when we say "Thy kingdom come!" is nothing less than the will of God done on earth as in heaven and will be a reality after our Lord has been reigning a thousand years and has subdued all things to Himself, the last enemy, death, having been destroyed (I Cor. xv, 25-28). If the hastening of this kingdom is our first aim, according to Matt. vi, 33, we may be sure that He will see to our having sufficient food and raiment, as He promised.

All classes of unrighteous people, including drunkards (I Cor. vi, 9-11), are excluded as such from the kingdom, but there is righteousness for them also if they will turn from their sins and receive the Lord Jesus as their Saviour. He has made peace for all by the blood of His cross (Col. i, 20), and there is no one who may not have His righteousness and peace and joy. If we who have these gifts by His grace are thinking more of our own enjoyment of them than of helping others to receive them and instead of commending Him and them are found disputing about what we consider our rights in the matter of eating and drinking, how dwelleth the love of God in us? If we are right with God, our question will not be may I do this or that, but how can I win some one to Christ, and if we think that anything, however lawful for us, will prove a hindrance or stumbling block to some weak one we will for Christ's sake and for the other's sake gladly refrain.

Our hearts will tell us quickly if the thing is quite right in the sight of God. "If our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart and knoweth all things; if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God (I John iii, 20-22, and verse 23 of the lesson). The main topic of the Bible is love, and "love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law" (xiii, 10). If around the world on this so called world's temperance Sunday there could be a worldwide proclamation of the love of God in Christ Jesus to all sinners and His readiness to give righteousness, peace and joy to all through that precious blood, what a great day it might be.

INVISIBLE BRAKES.

A Row of Reptiles That Eluded the Ordinary Passer's Eye.

The fact that snakes are rarely seen even when they are abundant was impressed upon the mind of the writer one day while waiting for a train at a small station in New Jersey. A marshy culvert, where a small stream flowed under the junction of the railway and a well traveled public road, seemed a favorable place for them. The stone wall, laid up without mortar, which supported the approach to the bridge had a southern exposure. The interior afforded ample hiding place, and the rocky borders of the stream presented good hunting for the species which live upon small fish, frogs, toads and earthworms.

The engineer, who for several years had passed his home a day at his leisurely occupation there, denied that there were snakes in the vicinity. "No more than there are in Ireland," he said, "but we ought to banish this creature by all rules which the immortal St. Patrick established when he drove, by the force of prayer, the last monster of the kind into the sea." Mr. Kay and a party of friends "walk" a very frequent train through the valley one day, but cleverly as people, many of whom would hesitate to pass within three feet of the well recognized snake, think that they are walking over a den of serpents.—Francis Metcalfe in Outing Magazine.

Color Sense.

Have human beings the animal's tendency to clothe themselves in colors that reproduce the prevailing tone of their surroundings? There is another question for scientists who have discovered that different colors produce differing effects on the health and disposition of individuals. At all events color associations in different parts of the world are decidedly at a variance. For instance, while we use black in mourning the Chinese wear white and the white copy white robes and white shoes on their feet. The royal color in Europe is purple—a tone of red, not of violet, as often misrepresented. In China, the imperial color is yellow, and a certain shade of yellow may not be worn by the common people, but is confined upon high officials as a great distinction.

Some individual color preferences are historical. Cleopatra loved yellow; Mme. de Pompadour delighted in a charming mixture of pink and blue; Napoleon's first empress, Josephine, wore the daring combination of black, white and emerald green, while Empress Field boldly declares that—

Any color, so long as it's red,
Is good enough for me.

Bargain Sales in Japan.

Even in pliant Japan they have bargain sales, but they conduct them on very different principles from the performances we have over here. An amusing American woman has embodied her experiences of traveling alone in Japan in a most entertaining volume just published, whence may be gathered a description of a sale at the greatest trading house in Japan.

The goods are not flung about. They are shown to advantage in locked cases, and the heads of departments keep the keys. Assistants, however, are laid on mats, and, though there is keen anxiety to secure bargains, perfect order and quiet prevail.

Babies toddle about quite comfortably, others sleep on their mothers' backs. However orderly and quiet though the Japanese bargain sale may be, it is not free from the shoplifter, and it is interesting to hear that the detective is as necessary in the flowery land as in England. The kimono sleeve is a useful receptacle for unconsidered

ALWAYS WAS SICK.

When a man says he always was sick—troubled with a cough that lasted all winter—what would you think if he should say—he never was sick since using Ballard's Horehound Syrup. Such a man exists.

Mr. J. C. Clark, Denver, Colorado, writes: "For years I was troubled with a severe cough that would last all winter. This cough left me in a miserable condition. I tried Ballard's Horehound Syrup and have not had a sick day since. That's what it did for me." Sold by Upchurch Drug co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thorsby.

Non-Resident Notice.

The State of Alabama, Chilton County.
Chancery Court, 7th District, Northeastern Div.
Josephine Perry, Complainant, vs. Clay Perry, Defendant.

In this cause it is made to appear to the Register, by the affidavit on file of W. H. Adams, Solicitor for Complainant, that the Defendant, Clay Perry, is a non-resident of the State of Alabama; that Complainant's present residence is unknown, and further, that in the belief of said affiant, the Defendant, Clay Perry, is over the age of twenty-one years.

It is therefore ordered by the Register, that publication be had in the Banner, a newspaper published in Clanton, Ala., once a week for four consecutive weeks, requiring him, the said Clay Perry, to appear, plead or demur to the bill of complaint in this cause on or before the 25th day of December, 1907, and failing so to do within thirty days after the service of this summons a decree pro confesso may be taken against him in said cause.

Witness my hand, this 5th day of November, 1907.

S. A. STEWART, Register in Chancery.

Bowel Trouble

is a sure sign that your digestive organs are overworked—too heavily burdened—in a state of revolution. Intestinal constipation, and if neglected will result in complications of the gravest character.

Death not infrequently comes as the penalty for thinking that the trouble will correct itself and disappear unassisted.

Don't neglect this condition—don't invite disaster by delay, but go to the nearest druggist and buy a bottle of

Dr. Caldwell's (Senna) Syrup Pepsin

It is the safest, quickest-acting and most effective remedy in the world for all bowel and stomach troubles—pleasant, powerful, and penetrating.

It reaches the seat of the trouble and instantly relieves it.

The confined gases are released, fermentation is stopped and the affected locality soothed and strengthened.

DR. CALDWELL'S SYRUP PEPSIN can be obtained in both dollar and half-dollar sizes at all druggists.

Your money will be refunded if it does not benefit you.

Your book and request will receive prompt attention. SEND FOR CALDWELL'S BOOK OF WONDERS—the only book of its kind ever published—and you should have a copy. Mail your postal today.

THE OPPORTUNITIES OF THE PRIMARY TEACHER

BY ALICE STOCK.

It cannot be said too often or with too great emphasis that, outside the home, the work of the Sunday school is the most far reaching, the most effective, and hence the most necessary for the salvation of the individual, the home, the state and the nation, and the establishment of the kingdom of Christ upon earth. The work of the Sunday school aims at the heart of the world's problems. It seeks the regeneration of the individual and so the regeneration of the state, the home and the world. Every one who has looked into the cause that wrought destruction among the people and nations of the past, and has studied the problems of the present, knows that anything short of this must fail. Men must "fear God and keep his commandments" if their lives are to be glorious and grand and the human race move on toward the goal of perfection and happiness. The Sunday school worker is at the very heart of things; is touching the very vitals of the home, the nation and the world; is clearing the way for true education, for "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." All Sunday school workers are partners with God as He operates His scheme of redemption for the salvation of the race. The first place in this partnership with God is the Primary teachers. There is no dignity, no inspiration that can come to a life anywhere or from any source comparable to that which comes to the pious devout soul that seeks to save the men and women of tomorrow. The child of to-day is the church of to-morrow. What a tremendous incentive to diligence, faithfulness and perseverance! Eighty-three per cent of the accessions to our churches come from our Sunday schools. No one renders so great a service to the home or to the world as he who saves tender childhood from the blight, mildew and power of sin, and prompts a life for the best possible service in the cause of Christ.

The greatest need of the hour is men and women, strong, fully developed in all the holy elements of Christian manhood and womanhood. Someone has said "the only thing God can make a man out of is a boy," and I can as truthfully add, the only thing God can make a woman out of is a girl; therefore, let us take care of the boys and girls. The true wealth of our country lies not in her mines, her forests, her productive soil, but in her bright boys and girls, and only by taking proper care of them can she become secure against the powers of evil that have torn empires and kingdoms from their foundations and left ruin, destruction and desolation in their paths. Therefore, fellow-teachers, let us look well to our high and holy task and remember, "thou must be brave thyself, if thou the truth would teach, live truly and thy life shall be a great and noble creed." Again there never was such a tenderly susceptible a thing as the soul of a child. It is as the clay in the hands of the potter. Benjamin West, a great artist, is quoted as saying, "A kiss from my mother made me a painter." It is that the loving service of the humblest teacher of the word of Jesus Christ may kindle in the breast of many a child, ideals of noblest Christian manhood or womanhood. The angel's face lies hidden in the marble, but the trained eye of the artist can see it, and his trained hand with patient stroke can make it stand out in bold relief and challenge the admiration of every lover of beauty. It is for the primary teacher to look beyond the dirty hands and noisy feet of the children and see what Jesus saw when He said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." We also must say, "They brethren come," and we must exert ourselves to save the only thing that compares the kingdom of God, men, women, love and gold. He who saves a man, saves a soul and covers a multitude of sins, but he who saves a child, saves a soul, plus a life and prevents the commission of a multitude of sins.

It is related of one of the world's great generals that his mother took him with her when he was but a boy to see the unveiling of the statue of an illustrious soldier. She noticed that he was singularly affected as he gazed upon the life like form of the soldier in marble. She led him home, but he looked back again and again. When after a while she missed him and thought him at his childish play, she went to seek for him and having looked everywhere, she was stirred with a mother's alarm. Recalling his strange interest in the statue, she hastened there. The crowd had gone, but she found him lying on the ground, gazing up at the soldier in stone, greatly agitated. The impression had been made upon his mind and heart and he made a soldier.

So it is the opportunity of the primary teacher to lead the tender impressible child, in thought to the hill of Calvary and there, by the help of the Holy Spirit, unveil the love of God for him in the death of Christ; there to Joseph's new tomb and let him see the power of God in the resurrection of Christ; thence to the hill of Olivet and unveil the glory of God in the ascension of Christ, and from there let him go out into the world not to be a great warrior and wade through the blood of his fellows to plan and power in the world, but to be "a soldier" of the Cross, a follower of the Lamb," to fight for the cause of truth, stand against the wrong that needs resistence, and for the cause that needs assistance.

It is said by balloonists that the voices of children are heard at a greater height than any other sound that goes up from the earth. They travel higher than the screech of the steam whistle, or the roar or the cataract, or the shout of a mob. It seems to the attentive ear that the requirements of children come first and rise the highest. They are the photographments of the race upon which wise shaping is given with the best results. "Wax to receive, they are marble to retain." What a mighty opportunity does this department of Christian service open up to those who will, with faith and God's good spirit for guidance, enter upon it. Thrice blessed is he or she who is called of God and set apart by the churches for this work.

The Postmaster of Gasconade, Mo., Daniel A. Bugh, says of DeWitt's Kidney and Bladder Pills, "I am doing so well and improving so fast in health, that I cannot say too much for your Kidney & Bladder Pills. I feel like a new man." DeWitt's Kidney and Bladder Pills are sold by Upchurch Drug co.

Baby Heirs Check Progress.

"What surprises me," said the western man, "is the number of one story or two story business buildings you have in New York. On some of your most prominent streets—on even the most important parts of Broadway—insignificant little shops stretch for whole blocks between magnificent skyscrapers. I should think the ground would be too valuable to produce no more rent than those little shops command, to say nothing of the appearance of your city."

"They do look bad," admitted the New Yorker frankly, "but often the condition is not one that can be prevented. Usually those estates belong to minors, and the property is not in such shape that enough money can be controlled by the guardians or trustees to put up large office or other business buildings. The rent from those little buildings is just about enough to pay the taxes, insurance, etc., and thus prevent the estate from running in debt, but the property cannot be sold nor further improved until all the heirs are of age.

"It is rather amusing, but not always entirely pleasing, to think that some baby is unconsciously controlling the condition of a whole New York block."—New York Press.

How to Cure a Cold.

Be as careful as you can you will occasionally take cold, and when you do, get a medicine of known reliability, one that has an established reputation and that is certain to effect a quick cure. Such a medicine is Chamberlin's Cough Remedy. It has gained a world wide reputation by its remarkable cures of this most common ailment, and can always be depended upon. It acts on nature's plan, relieves the lungs, aids expectoration, opens the secretions and aids nature in restoring the system to a healthy condition. During the many years in which it has been in general use we have yet to learn of a single case of cold or attack of the grip having resulted in pneumonia when this remedy was used, which shows conclusively that it is a certain preventive of that dangerous disease. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. For sale by Upchurch Drug Co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thorsby.

COURT DECIDED IN HIS FA

Cooper Fought to Retain Formula Has Made a Fortune.

L. T. Cooper, the man who believes that 90 per cent, of all ill health of this generation is caused by stomach trouble, is fast winning a national faith in his theory. His claim is now admitted by a surprising number of people throughout the country, and he is gaining new adherents every day.

While speaking of his success in a recent interview, Mr. Cooper said: "I believed ten years ago that any one who could produce a formula that would thoroughly regulate the stomach would have a fortune. When I got hold of this formula I knew within six months that I was right, and that my fortune was made. I called the medicine Cooper's New Discovery, although I did not get up the formula. I have owned it, however, for over three years. I have had one lawsuit over it, which I won in the courts. When it was settled The Cooper Medicine Company became the only firm in the world that can prepare the medicine. The preparation has sold like wildfire wherever introduced. As I have said before, it is successful simply because it puts the stomach in perfect shape, then nature does the rest. There are very number of complaints never before associated with stomach trouble that the medicine has alleviated in thousands of cases."

FOR THE CHILDREN

Birds in Foul Weather.

There is an old saying in England that—

A single magpie in spring
Foul weather will bring.

Like many other familiar sayings, this is founded on a close observation of the habits of the birds. Their instinct tells them when a storm is coming, and one stays on the nest to protect the eggs or the young, if they have been hatched, while the other goes off in search of food. In good weather both birds go on the search. Sea gulls fly to the land during a storm not because they are afraid of it, but because the fishes, on which they live principally, leave the surface of the water while the storm lasts and go below. The gulls must have something to eat, however, so they fly to the land and feed on the worms and larvae that the rain drives out of the ground. Petrels, on the contrary, fly out over the sea during a storm because they feed on the insects that are to be found in abundance about the spray of the waves.

Acting Proverbs.

The best way to play this game is for the players to divide themselves into two groups—namely, actors and audience. Each one of the actors will then fix upon a proverb, which he will act in turn before the audience. As, for instance, supposing one of the players to have chosen the proverb, "A bad workman quarrels with his tools," he goes into the room when the audience is seated, carrying with him a bag in which there is a saw, a hammer or any implement or tool used by a workman. He should look around and find a chair or some other article which he should pretend requires repairing. He should then set the workman by taking off his coat, rolling up his sleeves and commencing work, often dropping his tools and grumbling about them the whole time.

If this game be acted well it may be made very entertaining. The audience must guess the proverb acted and may, after a time, change places, becoming actors, while the actors are audience in turn and guess the proverbs performed before them.

Untouched Morocco.

Open your atlas at the map of Africa, and there, set like a pearl on the northwest shoulder of the continent, you will see a country called Morocco. It almost touches Europe. At the narrowest part there is but nine miles of strait between it and Spain, so you might think the Moors had become quite civilized in the course of ages through having such cultivated neighbors so near. It is not so, however. And, strange to say, the more they see of western progress the more they despise it. It is a big country, this Morocco, and explorers have left it alone, for the natives detest Christians, fearing lest they want to take away from them their lovely land, where it is always summer and where the soil if just scratched with a crooked stick responds with a teeming harvest.—W. G. Fitzgerald's "The Strange Tale of a Tyrant's Zoo" in St. Nicholas.

The Monkey Wrench.

The editor once had occasion to look up the origin of the name "monkey wrench" in response to the request of a young friend of his who, quite naturally, could not understand what connection there could be between a wrench and a monkey. Unless you have made the same search you would be surprised to hear how long it took to get the information. Dictionaries and encyclopedias were consulted in vain, but a well informed mechanic at last answered the question. It seems that the wrench was invented by a man named Charles Monkey, and it was at first called a "monkey wrench," but the "e" was dropped for a time, and it became the "monkey wrench."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

There is a number of people who are under an erroneous impression. They think that they never control enough money to start a bank account. In this they are mistaken. We solicit small accounts as well as large. And we handle the business of both with our best care. We believe that you ought to have a bank account, and we offer you our services.

THE CLANTON BANK

CLANTON, ALA.

Many people seem to think that unless they can open a Savings Account with not less than $50.00 or $100.00, it is not worth the while to begin. This is not a correct position to take. If a person cannot open an account with more than $1.00, and really desires to get some money ahead, then he should begin with even $1.00. The first dollar saved and put in bank, is the initial step on the way to prosperity. "Great oaks from little acorns grow." As a rule, the person who "Puts off" the opening of a Savings Account until he has a large amount to deposit, is not likely to ever have a bank account. We solicit your account.

Escaped From Jail.

Last Friday night eight prisoners, three white and five colored, made their escape from the Clanton jail by cutting a hole through the wall. Two other prisoners declined to leave with them, and as they were all charged with "baboing" the two that were left were given their liberty, while the officers of the law are on the lookout for the escapers.

It would appear that the walls of the new jail at Clanton must be of a cheese-like quality, judging from the easy way in which the prisoners cut their way through them. Perhaps, in course of time, they will harden as they season. Also, it would not be a bad idea to see that prisoners are without implements to cut through brick walls, for if they be as soft as they appear to be, prisoners could hardly get through them with their fingers.

Mulberry.

Editor Banner—Please allow me a small space in your valuable paper to say a few words. We are having some extra fine weather now after a weeks rain.

Health in our community is very good at present and everything is moving off good, generally. Farmers are about done gathering and some few have begun to prepare for another crop.

Rev. J. W. Mitchell filled his regular appointment at this place Sunday last, but was prevented from reaching us Saturday on account of the excessive rains.

I would like to say a few words to your correspondent from Mount Nebo in regard to the "dinners," as he calls them. He says he has actually known people to walk twenty miles to a dinner. Now, "Papa's Boy," I am very proud to say that we have no such folks in our community, but if we did, and they should go to Mount Nebo, they would not always get their dinner, for some of us, of which I am a member, went to your church last second Sunday to the Singing Convention (but we didn't walk) and to my certain knowledge didn't get any dinner at all, but we made it all right until we got back home, and then you call the singing a dinner, we, or at least some of us, got more singing than dinner.

Well, for fear this should find its way to the waste basket, I will close. Success to the Banner and its readers. COUNTRY GENT.

Card of Thanks

to our friends and relatives in Clanton and surrounding community.

You have our thanks for everything you done for us during the illness of myself and our little girl. While I was lying in the hospital at Birmingham my little girl was taken very ill, me not knowing anything about it until I returned home on the 16th inst., finding her unconscious. She only lived about 12 hours after I reached my home, though I feel like she had the very best of medical aid and the most kind attention of friends and relatives. May God's blessings smile upon you all forever is our prayer.
MR. AND MRS. G. W. PARRISH.

Stanton.

The entertainment at Mr. Ernest Pitts' Saturday night was a great success and also the oyster supper at Mr. John Hilyer's.

The young people are expecting to have a nice time Wednesday night at the box supper at Mr. L. L. Culver's.

Miss Eunice Milan of Riderville visited relatives here Wednesday.

Miss Lee Ella Parnell and Mr. Cal Foshee made a flying trip to Brierfield Sunday.

Mr. Albert Dyer called on Miss Clemmie Ruddick Sunday.

We regret to say that Perry Milan of Riderville is sick with typhoid fever; hope he will soon be well again.

With best wishes to the Banner and its many readers.

Editor Banner—Please allow me space in your paper to say a few words about our school. It is progressing nicely under the care of Prof. W. Z. Dennis. I think the community is more interested in school than ever before. Wake up boys and girls and learn something, for it is high time. Mr. Henry Patterson and two sisters visited Miss Birdie Mixon last Sunday. Mr. E. C. Easterling and two sisters were welcome visitors here. So I will rest till next time for fear of the waste basket. DEATH OF MR. GUY GANDY.

Oakmulgee, Ala., Nov. 21, 1907

On the night of the 22nd of November at seven o'clock the death angel came to the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Gandy, and taken from them their charming and most loving son, Guy, About the age of 16. He was loved by everybody who knew him. He carried sunshine with him everywhere he went. We were always glad to see Guy coming. He never made any profession, but just before dying he sang the song of "Away over in the promised land," and pointed homeward, and that is a great consolation to us. He leaves a father, mother, four sisters, one brother and a host of friends to mourn his departure. I trust our loss will be his gain. I pray the blessings of God on his family and entire community.

TO WIPE OUT PEONAGE

Mrs. Quackenbos to Begin Campaign Against Practice.

AN OUTLINE OF HER PLANS

She Thinks Immigration Into the South Will Not Suffer Material Set-Backs from Exposure of Oppression on Foreign Labor.

New Orleans, La., Nov. 22.—An outline of her plans for stamping out peonage in the south was given out Friday by Mrs. Mary Grace Quackenbos, the only woman special assistant to the attorney general of the United States. Mrs. Quackenbos was recently assigned to investigate peonage in southern states.

"One thing which I am compelled to fight against," said Mrs. Quackenbos, is the fact that few persons as yet realize my motive and purpose. With the proper support I believe I can completely wipe out peonage in the south within the next year."

Mrs. Quackenbos' prediction is based partly on her belief that peonage is not at all general. In her opinion immigration into the south will not suffer material set-backs from the exposure of this oppression on foreign labor. She says that charges of oppression in the south recently made in foreign countries are almost wholly due to letters which immigrants have written home and that a government investigation, by removing the cause for such letters, will benefit immigration.

Friday Mrs. Quackenbos arrived in Jackson, Miss., to prosecute a peonage charge here against O. B. Crittenden, a planter. When this case is settled her investigation will begin in Louisiana.

CHARGE OF GRAND LARCENY.

Three Officials of a Suspended New York Bank Indicted.

New York, Nov. 22.—The King county grand jury, which is investigating the recent management of the suspended Borough bank, of Brooklyn Thursday returned indictments charging larceny and other offenses against Howard Maxwell, who was president of the institution when its doors were closed. Arthur D. Campbell, the deposed cashier, and William Gow, a director, who holds a controlling share of the bank stock. These three men are jointly charged with grand larceny in the first degree in the misappropriation of $143,000 deposited by the executors of the Carrie M. McGuire estate. There is a second indictment for grand larceny against Maxwell, who is also indicted for forgery in the third degree. A second indictment against Campbell charges forgery in the third degree. In addition to the grand larceny charge Gow is indicted on four counts alleging misdemeanors in the matter of overdrafts. He is charged with having overdrawn his account to the amount of nearly $24,000. Maxwell also, it is alleged, secured overdrafts aggregating nearly $73,000.

Following the report of the jury the three men were arrested and arraigned. All pleaded not guilty, and were held for a hearing.

ABANDONS LAW PRACTICE.

Prominent Young Attorney Has Too Tender a Heart for Profession.

Waterbury, Conn., Nov 22.—Declaring that he can no longer bear to witness the suffering of clients who are forced to seek a lawyer's advice on account of troubles, Joseph S. Lauber has abandoned the practice of law and announced that he will engage in some occupation where the sights incurred are less pitable.

"The nervous strain of the average lawyer's general practice is too much for any man, unless he is singularly callous and cold-hearted," said Mr. Lauber. "The shifting of a client's troubles to the shoulders of his attorney not only stirs sympathies to the depths, but burdens him with responsibility which is sometimes killing."

Mr. Lauber is one of the most successful of the younger attorneys here. He is a graduate of Yale.

Boy Mangled in Shafting.

Covington, Ga., Nov. 22.—Lake Mamby, a white boy aged 15 years, of age, employed in the Covington mill, was caught in a running belt in the mill Thursday afternoon and was badly mangled. Young Mamby was assisting in putting on one of the main belts when he was caught and carried over the shafting in the top of the building, completely tearing off all his clothing and shoes. Both legs were broken, and it is thought he received internal injuries. Several of his toes were torn from his feet.

$70,000 Fire at Cincinnati.

Cincinnati, O., Nov. 22.—The five-story building at Sixth and Elm streets, occupied by the firm of Stewart & Fielding, leaf tobacco handlers and dealers, was gutted by fire early today, entailing a loss on stock of [illegible] estimated at $50,000; [illegible] and fixtures estimated at $10,000; [illegible] damage estimated at $10,000.

DEATH AT DANCE.

Trouble Occurs at Country Negro Festival in Mitchell County, Ga.

Liberty, Ga., Nov. 22.—Seven negroes extinguished, pistols volleying, terrified women screaming, and three injured presided over a gloomy dance at the home of George Vinet, six miles from Pine, in Mitchell county, wound up between 11 and 12 o'clock Thursday night in a carnival of blood.

When the smoke of battle lifted and lamps were relighted it was found that Will Shiver, member of a prominent Mitchell county family and a young man highly thought of, was dead with a bullet in his brain; Peter Lashley and Floyd Fowler were painfully wounded by pistol balls; Mack Ford and Hillie Shiver were insensible from the effect of frightful beatings, and several others were injured.

The coroner is making an investigation of the case, but at last reports no verdict had been returned. A large number of witnesses will be examined and there will probably be some delay in reaching a verdict. There is a good deal of doubt as to who fired the shot which killed Shiver, owing to the fact that the lights were all extinguished at the time the shooting began.

About thirty shots were fired in the crowded room in which the dance was being held, and it was miraculous that many more people were not killed or seriously injured.

PLEA OF INSANITY.

Defense in Bradley Trial Introduces Expert Testimony.

Washington, Nov. 22.—The defense in the trial of Mrs. Annie M. Bradley, charged with the murder of former Senator Arthur M. Brown, of Utah, in this city last December, Friday endeavored to strengthen its plea of insanity by introducing expert testimony on this subject. Several alienists of note were present expecting to take the stand during the day.

Although it is not claimed that at the present time Mrs. Bradley is insane, the experts will be put on the stand to show that for some time previously and on the date of the tragedy Mrs. Bradley was irresponsible, caused by the several criminal operations, and by the many wrongs which Brown is alleged to have heaped upon her, culminating in his change of heart. As the case progresses interest in its increases.

Long before the doors to the court room were opened a crowd of men and women had collected on the outside waiting an opportunity to hear some of the testimony and get a glimpse of the frail little woman who has achieved so much noteriety.

MAN SCALDED TO DEATH.

Fatal Accident at Plant of Atlanta Gas Light Company.

Atlanta, Nov. 22.—Charlie Andrews, a negro, was scalded to death, and Jim Smith, a white man, and Cicero Fielding, a negro, were seriously burned while working on a boiler at the plant of the Atlanta Gas Light company Thursday afternoon.

The men were in the fire box of one of the boilers, having entered in order to clean it out. It is alleged that the boiler, which is one of the 125-horsepower boilers of the plant, had no fire under it for five days and it was not known that the water was boiling. While the men were at work in some manner they broke the 24-inch exhaust pipe and turned upon themselves a stream of hot water. Andrews, who was nearest the exhaust, was scalded to death almost instantly. Smith, and the second negro, however, were rescued before they had been injured fatally.

PREDICTS GREAT DISASTERS.

Rev. Thomas Clark Says Earth Will Be Destroyed in 1906.

Knoxville, Tenn., Nov. 22.—A special to the Sentinel from Bristol, Tenn., says:

Rev. Thomas Clark, of Abingdon, Va., preacher, politician and prophet, who foretold the eruption of Mount Pelee, the destruction of Galveston, Tex., and other calamities, has made a prdiction that the earth will be destroyed early next year and that men high in the councils of the nation will shortly fall the victims of assassins' bullets. He also predicts that there shortly will be another outbreak in the Philippines, and that New York city will be partially destroyed by fire early in December.

Strike Has Ended.

Calcutta, Nov. 22.—The strike of the employees of the East Indian railway at Asansol, Bengal, at the junction of the East Indian and Bengal-Nagpur railway, has collapsed with the exception [illegible] of some of the European leaders of the movement. Most of the engineers promptly resigned work and traffic, which had been at a standstill for a week, was re-established.

Jewel Sale Again Postponed.

Brussels, Nov. 22.—The sale at the jewels of the late Queen Marie Henriette, [illegible] was again been postponed, this time for three weeks, at the request of [illegible] agent, [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

GRATEFUL JAILBIRDS.

They Tell Governor Thomas Their Reasons For Thanks.

The following is a copy of a circular headed "Why We Are Thankful," written by the prisoners in jail at Macon, Mo., last Thanksgiving day and placed in the hands of the sheriff with the request to let the light shine on it:

Dear Governor—We have read your Thanksgiving proclamation with interest and will state for your information as well as we may be able in our limited environments. Although nobody died out from the want of prunes, we have much to be thankful for. The prunes are not pinching toes as we exercise on bare floors this day in Mr. Rockefeller, Senator Platt, White Hearse and other men with a larger measure of liberty. Our appetite is of the never-get-every kind, and we don't have to take exercises for ourselves.

We are not nervous concerning burglars and holding men, and our diamonds are the least of our worries. Nobody drives round and tries to work us on wildcat mining stock or sell us gold bricks. The next man hasn't come after his money, and we don't look for him. Snow, ice, sleet and whitry winds are nothing to us. We don't have to get up early Sunday morning and fix for Sunday school.

Three times a day, week in and week out, we get beans, corn dodger and cold water, except on holidays, when there's a double ration of water.

In looking over these matters we find that we are blest far beyond the common run, for which we are deeply thankful, governor. We feel satisfied. We don't care to get any nearer where you live, much as we like you. Your ways are not our ways, and we wish to be particular and lead a quiet, orderly life. Respectfully,

GEORGE O'BRIEN, WILL MITCHELL,
"LENGTHY BOB,"

FAMOUS FAST AND FEAST.

One Preceded and One Followed the Civil War.

Queerly enough, both national fasts and national Thanksgiving were affected by the civil war. President Buchanan appointed a day of national fasting and prayer to avert civil war. Republican governors of states in some instances ignored it and in others took notice of it in a way to rub their ideas against Buchanan and his party into their proclamations. Democratic governors, south and north, under the form of an appeal to the Deity, castigated Republicanism to the best of their ability.

As President Buchanan called the nation to prayer to avert civil war, so did President Lincoln call it to thanksgiving for victories in a civil war, to the end that more victories might bring union and peace. Of course, as Mr. Buchanan was ignored or satirized in antipathetic political quarters in the north, so was President Lincoln criticised and even abused in the south, where the Union forces were not in control. But as Mr. Buchanan was the pioneer in a national fast day and as Mr. Lincoln was the pioneer in national thanksgiving days it is well to remember that sectional conditions in a sectional war moved both and that the great national observance which we now have was born in the throes of fratricidal civic contention.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Murderers and Barbarians Barred.

A feast answering the purpose of our Thanksgiving day was held by the ancient Greeks in honor of Demeter, the deity who owned the earth in their eyes. The rallying point for this feast, which lasted nine days, was at Athens. All except murderers and barbarians took part in it. The fruits of the earth which seemed to please the Greeks most were barley, mint, pomegranates and poppy seeds. In addition to eating and drinking more than ordinarily, a grand torchlight procession along the Sacred Way to Eleusina was the chief attraction. The sacred way seems to have been to the ancient Greek what Fifth avenue is to the modern New Yorker.

Thanksgiving Decorations.

Tiny paper pumpkins make attractive place cards, or if one is skilled in the use of water colors a clever one may be made from water color board decorated with fruits or flowers. Tiny canoes of birch bark to hold the bonbonnieres make acceptable souvenirs. If one has not the time or talent to make place card favors very clever little papier mache bonbon boxes may be bought, representing roast turkey, mince pies, pumpkins or other designs appropriate to the season. Tiny wishbones polished with sandpaper and tied to a card are very satisfactory and suggest the kindly thought of the hostess.

Ragamuffin Parades.

But twelve permits were issued by the police of New York for "ragamuffin" parades through the city's streets last Thanksgiving day. Patrolman Frederick Kremmerbein of the bureau of information said that he remembered when 100 and even more permits were issued for Thanksgiving day parades only four or five years back. Among the best known of the ragamuffin associations which did not apply for marching permits were the Original Hound Guards, the Eagle Rangers, the Home Guards, the Mackerel Rangers, the Phoenix Light Guard and the Slickville Slenderfoot Army.

Thanksgiving on the Continent.

Germany and Russia adopt the rather sensible plan of appointing Thanksgiving days when they have some special reason for so doing, though Russia hasn't had much to be thankful for in late years. In Hungary Thanksgiving days or something analogous to them used to be common, but have now passed away, except on rare occasions of national rejoicing. Then a horse race of a particularly exciting description takes the place that football occupies in the American observance of the real thing in the way of Thanksgiving celebrations.

ACTION OF ALCOHOL.

The Seven Stages of Drunkenness and the Results.

According to the evidence given recently by Dr. R. T. Williams, an English physician, in a London police court, says the Literary Digest, the drunkard passes seven stages of drunkenness—irritable, noisy, quarrelsome, objectionable, boisterous, followed, if the intake does not stop enough, by collapse and death. It is noted by the British Medical Journal, from which this report is taken, that other authorities have formulated these stages in different ways. Says this paper:

"Magnan, who was one of the first to begin the scientific study of the physiological action of alcohol, distinguished five stages—first, slight exhilaration and a feeling of well being, in which speech and gestures become more animated; in the second stage ideas became crowded together and confused, the moral being, without any very obvious reason for the difference, gay or sad or full of tender emotion; in the third stage the confusion of ideas was greater and accompanied by incoherence, perversion of taste and smell, flushed, thick speech, vacant countenance and staggering gait; the fourth stage was coma and the fifth death. Magnan's second stage has been graphically described by Claye Shaw as 'a loss of the sense of awareness of surroundings.'"

MEN AND MACHINES.

The Limit of Human Speed Has About Been Reached.

One thing alone can intervene and put the curb on the desire for speed—man's powers of endurance. Already there are signs that it has almost reached its limit. The increase of nervous diseases, the spread of insanity, these and other warnings should serve as danger signals that the speed of modern life is excessive. The adjusting of a man's frame to rapidly changing conditions, great though it be, yet has its limits.

Machinery may be perfected to an incredible degree, but man—unless we are to conceive of him as becoming absolutely machine-like—will always have his limitations of flesh and blood. He will always be a fantastic creature, subject to strange emotions, uncertain gusts of passion, sudden tricks of nerves or of physical exhaustion. Among the daily catastrophies from the lust of speed it is rare to find that it is the machinery which is at fault. It is the failure of the eye to transmit with sufficient rapidity the danger message to the brain or an error in judgment or a sudden nerve failure, one of these which brings about disaster. Man may perfect the machine, but he remains himself ever imperfect.—London Saturday Review.

Nurses Dread Lightning.

Of all people who are glad when the season of thunderstorms is past, none are more thankful than professional nurses.

"It isn't that we are so afraid of lightning ourselves," said a nurse in Roosevelt hospital, "but it has a harmful effect on our patients. Most sick people have an unreasonable fear of lightning. In cases of extreme weakness or nervousness a dozen flashes of blinding lightning reduce the patient to such a state of prostration that it takes extraordinary efforts on the part of the nurse to bring him around. If one sick person requires all that extra attention in a thunderstorm, just imagine the predictment of the nurse who has a whole ward full of them on her hands."—New York Press.

Excusable.

"I suppose," remarked the coy widow, "that you are not an advocate of early marriage?"

"Oh, yes, I am," replied the scanty haired bachelor.

"Then," continued the c. w., "why is it you are still a bachelor?"

"That's quite another matter," answered the bachelor. "The only marriages I believe in are early ones, because there is some excuse for youthful follies."—Chicago News.

Mange In Horses.

The best cure for mange in horses is creolin, says Farm Progress. Put eight tablespoonfuls of creolin into a quart of soft water (rainwater is best) and rub it well into the skin where affected, or carbolic acid at the rate of one tablespoonful to one pint of sweet oil, rubbed well in, will cure; also crude coal oil and flowers of sulphur or in the absence of the crude oil a mixture of kerosene oil and lard with the sulphur in it.

Tonic For Farm Animals.

Give a teaspoonful of copperas in the feed once each day to the animal that does not gain flesh, says Farmers Advocate. Animals which eat greedily and still remain poor should especially receive this treatment.

He Fought at Gettysburg.

David Parker, of Fayette, N. Y., who lost a foot at Gettysburg, writes: "Electric Bitters have done me more good than any medicine I ever took. For several years I had stomach trouble, and paid out much money for medicine to little purpose, until I began taking Electric Bitters. I would not take $500 for what they have done for me." Election.

...ding the lives of the present g... ...there are here and ...ers, two to three of Republi... rule, or rather three, if you would ...their right. The whole thing was ... "Just a Voter" to vote and tell ... little it happened and ... here it is, and of the trouble ... that is clog wheels and ... forth. It was awful cost to change ... everything in the Democratic party ... simply because the party was in ... power. Now, the facts in that case were the issues had not been changed that the Republicans in the Harrison had made. In this case the Republican party has had ample time to put everything on what they boasted of in the last campaign—i. e., to fix things so nothing would ever happen to stop prosperity. Now, are they making good? Of course some of the wisest ones will tell the cause in this county the present trouble comes from some other source. If this panic had happened under Democratic rule it would almost be dangerous for a fellow to meet a Republican in the road. Another question is, when will it cease? Answer, after March 4, 1909, when that patent and oblast of American Statesmen, William J. Bryan, with his Democratic house and senate elected by the people, when he presses command peace will be restored and then you can go to town and swap your produce for real cash instead of scrip.

My good friends who have been voting the Republican ticket in this county, sit down and look the thing full in the face, and ask yourself this question: If Grover Cleveland and his party was the cause of hard times in 1893, why not Theodore Roosevelt and his party the causes of the present trouble? Pull the wool from over your eyes and do your own thinking.

Yours truly,
A COUNTRY DEMOCRAT.

A Hard Debt to Pay.

"I owe a debt of gratitude that can never be paid off," writes G. S. Clark, of Westfield Iowa, "for my rescue from death by Dr. King's New Discovery. Both lungs were so seriously affected that death seemed imminent, when I commenced taking New Discovery. The first bottle stopped my hacking cough, quit before the first bottle was used, and two more bottles made a complete cure." Nothing has ever equaled New Discovery for coughs, colds and all throat and lung complaints. Guaranteed by Upchurch Drug co. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

The Castle Comedy

By Thompson Buchanan

This is a rattling good love story of merry old England at the close of the Napoleonic wars.

In the scene pictured here the wilful young lady is telling her father she doesn't intend to marry. She means she does not intend to marry the nobleman her father has selected.

The reason, as the reader soon discovers, is that she has fallen in love with a French dancing master. Out of this complication grows the story.

Even if Thompson Buchanan were not a Louisville boy and had not written indescribable stories for the Herald we would not hesitate in surrendering to his Castle Comedy the palm for absolute fascination.

THE Legislature adjourned last Saturday, having completed the work for which it was called in special session.

Railroad legislation was enacted in accordance with the desires of Gov. Comer, and there seems to be a strong possibility of the legislation being fought by the roads.

State prohibition after Jan. 1, 1909, was carried, and we can all prepare to go dry.

The bill to prevent shipping in C. O. D. packages and that to prosecute without indictment for violations is the sum total of the general anti-saloon legislation for the special session.

The bill fixing the time for holding Circuit court in Chilton county was passed, and courts in future will be held on the eleventh Monday after the fourth Monday in February, and on the thirteenth Monday after the fourth Monday in August.

MILLET'S POVERTY.

Incident in the Life of the Great French Painter.

It seems almost incredible that Millet, painter of "The Angelus" and other now world famous pictures, should have suffered from the poverty that forms the basis of the following story, but it is a fact that he did: One day, indeed, he found himself without food in the house for himself and his family. In his extremity Diaz offered to take two of Millet's drawings to Paris and make an effort to sell them. Evening came, the Millet family anxiously awaiting their friend's return. If he came back without the drawings it meant bread; with them, hungry to bed. Night fell, the family sitting in darkness because they felt they could not afford a light.

At last they heard the stamping of Diaz's wooden leg as he crossed the little paved court and his lusty voice, calling out: "Light! Light! Where is the light?" The family hurried to light a candle. But even while the head of the old fashioned sulphur match still was spluttering Diaz, who was a Spaniard and nothing if not temperamental, slapped down two loaves of bread on the table, one after another, in quick succession. When at last the candle was burning he drew out 60 francs in gold, all save one piece, which he had been obliged to change in buying the bread. He arranged the gold pieces in a circle like a halo around the candle, ending with the change, of which he made a neat pile.

"Ah," sighed Millet as he regarded the unhoped for treasure, "if only I could count on a sum like this every week!"

"Would you turn capitalist?" reproachfully asked Diaz.

If to suffer is a spur to genius, is it a wonder that these Barbizon men were great painters?

Richter's Conducting.

Countless are the stories told of the geniality of Dr. Hans Richter. Once while rehearsing a Mozart symphony in which the first violins had a number of delicate trills and turns to perform these were played too heavily for Richter, who said: "Please, gentlemen, pianissimo! Queen Mab, not suffragettes." Again when on one occasion Richter was not thoroughly satisfied with the orchestral rendering of a scene from "Tristan und Isolde" he stopped the rehearsal and asked for more dignity in the playing, adding that Isolde was the daughter of a king, not of a cook. On another occasion while rehearsing Tschaikowsky's "Romeo and Juliet" music the violoncellos have a very passionate melody to play. Richter was by no means satisfied that the needful warmth of expression had been obtained. "Gentlemen, gentlemen," said he, "you all play like married men, not like lovers."—London Tit-Bits.

On the Job.

Amusing epitaphs are common enough, but it is not often that a tombstone inscription is meant to carry a business advertisement. A West Virginia man tells of a singular one which may be seen in a certain cemetery. It was the idea of a widow of a man named Perkins, a partner in a commercial house known as Perkins & Parker. Soon after the decease of her spouse Mrs. Perkins married Mr. Parker, her late husband's business associate. The inscription reads:

"Sacred to the memory of James Perkins, for thirty years senior partner of the firm of Perkins & Parker, now Parker & Co."—Harper's Weekly.

Warning to Route 5.

Clanton, Nov. 15, 1907

Editor Banner—I will thank you to publish the following letter which I have received from the post office department relative to rural Route No. 5. It looks as if the route is not doing the required amount of business, and I hope the patrons will go to work and get boxes and subscribe for more papers, and save the route from being cut to tri-weekly service.

I have also received an inquiry from the department as to the business of route No. 6. Respectfully,

P. O. DUDLEY, Postmaster.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 15, 1907

The Postmaster, Clanton, Ala.

Sir:—A recent inspection of rural service from your office develops the fact that patrons on Route No. 5 are not showing the proper appreciation of the service as evidenced by the small number of pieces of mail handled by carrier on this route which was much below the average.

You will take this matter up with those persons who have thus far failed to accept the service, with a view to having them erect approved boxes in order that the amount of mail handled by carrier may be increased to an extent justifying the continuance of daily service.

If a material increase is not reported within a reasonable time, it may be necessary to reduce frequency of service on the route to tri-weekly.

Very respectfully,
P. V. DEGRAW,
Fourth Asst. Postmaster Gen.

Our National Bird

By JESSE WATERMAN.

HURRAH—the lunch, for the noble old bird
We've endorsed as the shield of our nation!
Our homes with holy emotions are stirred
When we think of that feathered creation.
He sang when the winter snows dashing the sky
And the heavens with sunshine are ready,
Forgetting the eagle and Fourth of July,
We think of Thanksgiving and turkey.

THE TURKEY'S THE BIRD FOR THANKSGIVING.

THE eagle, proud bird, may be soon refined and tamed
As he mounts up still higher and higher!
While the turkey, we trust, will still roost near the ground,
Within reach when occasion requires.
For we've some friends some who will come to-day,
In the name of good cheer and good living,
That the eagle's all right for the Fourth of July,
But the turkey's the bird for Thanksgiving.

FIFTY YEARS AGO.

Thanksgiving Day In Old New England.

A charming description of a New England Thanksgiving day fifty years ago is given by Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe in one of her novels. Of all days in the year it was the one for which a new dress was imperatively demanded. Now ways of making squash pies and quince tarts were proper subjects for conversation for some days before the feast. For a week before the date fixed the children of each homestead were kept busy chopping mince meat and pounding cinnamon, allspice and cloves in a wooden mortar, slicing candied orange peel and stoning raisins.

All the members of the family came home to eat their Thanksgiving dinner. The common constituted of turkeys, chickens and chicken pies, then plum puddings and afterward pies. After the dinner the patriarch of the house gave a recital of all God's mercies to them, speaking from the text, "Let children hear the mighty deeds which God performed of old." That there is no present occasion for emulating their fathers' deeds is all the more reason for observing Thanksgiving day.—New York Times.

Thanksgiving Day in Paris.

Last Thanksgiving was celebrated by Americans in Paris in a manner that was as "traditional" as was possible in face of a few shortcomings, such as almost complete famine in pumpkin pie and a shortage in the cranberry supply.

Dinners were enjoyed at home by Americans who have homes in Paris, but the "floaters" who find themselves far from their native hearths on feast days had to trust their fates to hotels and restaurants.

The American Art association at 74 Rue Notre Dame des Champs gave a dinner for its members.

Hotel and restaurant proprietors have long since appreciated the importance of Thanksgiving day as a "jour de fete" for Americans, and they had prepared the "national dish." Among these were the Athenee, Langham and Continental hotels and Noel, Peters and Champeaux restaurants, which were all crowded with Americans at the dinner hour.

Thanksgiving Hints.

Let no one else suspect that you have little cause for thankfulness.

Remember that every one has cause to be thankful—if not for personal, at least for family, sectional and national reasons.

Try to find the true spirit of thanksgiving in thinking of other people's happiness and so find at least a faint reflection in your own heart.

Remember that there are more reasons for the national holiday than a football game and a big dinner.

Do not let the responsibility of entertaining guests interfere with the pleasure of their society.

If the unavoidable hitches in the domestic machinery occur, console yourself with the thought that, although the turkey was underdone, the pumpkin pie was beyond reproach and that if the cook forgot the celery she remembered the salad dressing which you had forgotten.

And try for one day to be charitable not only in deed, but in every thought and word.

A few words on Prohibition.

The question of "prohibition" is now exciting great interest in the minds of our Christian people. It seems like the greater majority are realizing the great destruction of intoxicating liquors, to our young people and old as well, and have set out with new courage and a determined resolution to banish the destructive stuff from our beautiful Christian land. And we trust that they will continue to fight the "grave monster" until they have driven him from off the face of the earth. Yet there are some of our Christians, we regret to say, that are on the opposite side. They are already complaining that this money panic has been brought about by those who are working in favor of prohibition, not considering the welfare of their children and other loved ones.

I would ask those who are upholding the sinful stuff, how can you in the name of reason, sacrifice the souls and character of your children and friends for the sake of money? And which is more dearer to you, or which is more profitable, your children or the goods of this world? Doubtless there are some who read this, have already made the expression that they would not sacrifice the souls or welfare of their children under any circumstances. I would ask you to top one moment and consider where you stand. If you are in sympathy with the liquor side and are trying to retain the destructive stuff in our country, try, in order that the banks may be opened, or to receive a better price for your produce, then it is an evident fact that by your work you are destroying the morals of your children and bringing shame and disgrace upon them, and in this way are destroying their souls eternally. Oh! how many homes are eternally wrecked by this sinful stuff? How many bright sons and daughters, whose lives promised to be full of sunshine and of usefulness to God and their fellow men, have been wrecked and their lives mutilated by the sinful influence of whiskey that had brought their fathers to shame. How many wives whose lives have been eternally marred by their dissipating husbands, who in years gone by promised in the marriage altar to love and cherish until death. How many loving fathers and mothers have been brought to shame, and whose heads have been whitened by the dissipation of their children, who left their fathers instructions and their loving mothers admonition and have been led off by the influence of strong drink.

Now in the face of all this my christian friends, how can we vote any other but a prohibition ticket. So let us determine now, by the help of the divine spirit of Christ, to do everything we can to drive the destructive stuff from our midst, that our fathers and fathers' sons may be free from this great temptation, though it cost all we have.

Death of Elijah Headley.

On Monday morning, Nov. 18, at 3 o'clock, the death angel came to the home of Brother and Sister Elijah Headley and took from this world of care and suffering the sainted spirit of Bro. Elijah Headley. Bro. Headley had lived to a good old age, he had reached his three score years and ten; he was born Feb. 13, 1837; married Miss Pairalee Headley on Oct. 25, 1855, and soon after their marriage they joined the M. E. church South and lived together consistent Christians in that church until the war between the States; they then moved to the present home of the family where he lived and died. Bro. Headley was first after the close of the war, in which he had been a faithful soldier, to enroll his name on the church book and build up the M. E. church in his community. He was ever energetic and prompt in business. A kind neighbor, a faithful friend, a devoted Christian. He loved his church and was ever at his place in the church and ready to answer to her calls of duty by his prompt attendance, his prayers and his means of finance. Bro. Headley lived to see his children all grown and faithful members of the church, seven in number, six daughters and one son; he lived to see his grand children and great grand children. He was a careful, loving father and a devoted husband. But Bro. Headley has finished his work, he has written the last line of life's record. God said it is enough, come up higher, and we are constrained to say blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; yea sayeth the spirit, for henceforth they cease from their labors and their works do follow them. Then weep not, dear ones, he is not dead, but sleepeth; he cannot come to you but you can go to him. On Tuesday, the 19th, after an impressive service by his pastor, Rev. S. U. Turnipseed, all that was mortal of Bro. Headley was laid to rest in Mt. Nebo cemetery, attended by a large concourse of weeping relatives and sorrowing friends.

Coughs and Colds in Children.

"My little girl is subject to colds" says Mrs. Wm. H. Sprig, No. 41, Fifth St., Wheeling, W. Va. "Last winter she had a severe spell and a terrible cough but I cured her with Chamberlain's Cough remedy without the aid of a doctor, and my little boy has been prevented many times from having the croup by the timely use of this syrup." This remedy is for sale by Upchurch Drug Co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thorsby.

Couldn't Feel Her.

Mrs. Murray Keith, a venerable Scotch lady, from whom Sir Walter Scott derived many of the traditions and anecdotes wrought in his novels, taxed him one day with the authorship, which he stoutly denied.

"What!" exclaimed the old lady. "D'ye think I dinna ken my ain groats among other folks' hail?"

Girlhood and Scott's Emulsion are linked together.

The girl who takes Scott's Emulsion has plenty of rich, red blood; she is plump, active and energetic.

The reason is that at a period when a girl's digestion is weak, Scott's Emulsion provides her with powerful nourishment in easily digested form.

It is a food that builds and keeps up a girl's strength.

A Helping Hand.

When the foreign missionary had concluded his talk he made the usual appeal for contributions, however small. Coming up to the platform with several others, a small boy mounted to the level of the lecturer and, fastening forward him, said:

"Please, sir, I was very much interested in your lecture, and—and"—

"Go on, my little man," said the missionary encouragingly. "You want to help in the good work?"

"Not exactly, sir," said the boy. "What I want to know is, have you any foreign stamps you don't want?"—Success Magazine.

An Easy Mark.

Theodore—It's all right, darling; I have met your father and we took to one another at once. He even went so far as to borrow £10 of me. Sure-ly he can't refuse me your hand after that. The Keen Kutter Safety Razor

There is no reason why every man should not use the "Keen Kutter" Safety Razor.

Your beard may be tough as wire and your skin as tender as a baby's; or your beard may be uneven; part wiry and part soft as silk; or your face may be so sensitive and tender that the mere thought of a barber gives you a cold chill.

These difficulties are all overcome by using the Keen Kutter Safety Razor. The man who has made a complete failure with other Safety Razors and considers none of them good, should try our Keen Kutter. They are sold under a strict guarantee.

Try one and you will be pleased. Ask Rev. F. M. Woods, pastor of the Baptist Church, Clanton, Ala., what he thinks of them.

IN THE YEAR 1621.

The First Thanksgiving Day in America and Why.

The first Thanksgiving held in America was by the pilgrims of them in the year 1621, shortly after they landed at Plymouth rock. It was not very much of a Thanksgiving, for they did not find that they had very much to be thankful for, but was rather a revival of the English harvest home. Matters were about the same in 1622 and with much about the same result in giving thanks. In 1623, however, an especial ship failed to arrive with provisions when they were likely to be most wanted, and the prospects of famine were so bright that Governor Bradford, acting in the undoubted exercise of his prerogative, ordered a day to be set apart for fasting, humiliation and prayer.

But before the day appointed had come providence turned up all right, and the day was turned into one of thanksgiving. Mr. Winslow, one of the pilgrims, in a letter gives an interesting account of this memorable day in American history. The celebration was held with "glory, honor and praise, with all thankfulness to our good God which deals so graciously with us." Ninety Indians, headed by King Massasoit, arrived at the settlement in the nick of time and shared in the feast. This celebration was somewhat previous, for not long after the pilgrims were down to plain hominy without bread, and spring water, "which," said Governor Bradford, "somewhat impaired the freshness of our complexions," as well it might.—Boston Transcript.

THANKSGIVING IN LONDON.

How Americans Away From Home Celebrate Turkey Day.

The members of the American society and their guests, to the number of more than 600, gathered on Nov. 28 last year at the Hotel Cecil for the annual Thanksgiving dinner of the society. The dining hall and the tables were decorated with products of field and garden and fayon. The menu was in the shape of a pumpkin, to which was attached a corn husk. Ambassador Reid, Robert J. Wynne, the American consul general, the embassy staff and the head masters of England's great public schools were among the guests of the evening. John Morgan Richards, father of the late Mrs. Craigie, presided.

After the toast to [illegible] had been honored the [illegible] ham, head master of [illegible] the health of President Roosevelt. He said that, speaking for the schoolboys of England, no living personage was as interesting as the American president, whose sportsmanship, honesty and strength had made him the admiration of both English boys and men. The speaker declared President Roosevelt to be the most important figure in civilization.

THANK OFFERINGS.

How the Rich of Westchester County, N. Y., Celebrate.

Rich residents in Westchester county, N. Y., celebrated last Thanksgiving day by having turkeys and dinners distributed among their poor neighbors, at hospitals and homes for poor children.

William Rockefeller, through his manager, had turkeys given to his employees, while Miss Helen Miller Gould, though she was far away on a trip, did not forget the little crippled boys at her home called Woodycrest, near Irvington. Every year the little lads who are educated by her special teachers are given a turkey dinner, and last year was no exception. Miss Gould sent word to have a special Thanksgiving feast served to them.

F. G. Thebaud, Howard Willets, A. C. Bostwick and other wealthy men had turkeys distributed among their poor neighbors. Mrs. C. Oliver Iselin, who is president of the day nursery at New Rochelle, also arranged for dinners to be distributed. At the Wartburg farm and the Bedford Home For Women special dinners were served.

Chicago Newsboys Fed.

An army of 8,000 newsboys enjoyed the twenty-fifth annual Thanksgiving dinner given by a clothing company. The bill of fare bulk was as follows: Two hundred and fifty turkeys, 250 chickens, 1,800 loaves of bread, 1,000 dozen cakes, 100 bunches of bananas, 2 barrels of cranberry sauce, 25 ten gallon cans of mashed potatoes, 1,500 pies, 25 boxes of oranges, 25 barrels of apples, 25 boxes of celery, figs, dates, raisins and nuts unscheduled, besides ten barrels of lemonade. It took fifty men to serve the dinner and twenty-five women to wash the dishes.

Thanksgiving in Moses' Day.

Over 3,000 years ago the Israelites wandering in the desert were instructed by Moses to observe a holiday similar in character to the modern American Thanksgiving day when they came to the promised land. It was called the feast of the tabernacles and took place about the end of harvest time. For eight days they dwelt in booths made of evergreens. They partook of corn, wine, oil and the fruits of the ground. The priests performed a magnificent ritual of which melodious choruses formed a large part.

No Turkey For Caesar.

The Romans had a harvest feast in honor of the Goddess Ceres, who, though of feminine gender, seems to have presided over their department of agriculture. The Romans had no turkeys and could not, of course, kill and eat the sacred goose, but managed to get along very well on fat capons and Falernian wine for all that.

By THOMPSON BUCHANAN

"And he could not speak French?" said Dubarre in surprise.

"Only English, monsieur," replied Pierre positively.

"Come, I'll mangle it. Haybap he'll wish both were deaf and dumb."

They hurried to the lodge and threw open the door. A gust of air from the open window met them, and the flickering candle showed the room to be empty.

"Why, Pierre, what have you done with the guests?"

The dancing master asked the question, stepping to laugh at his assistant. Pierre was running about the room like a dog that had lost a trail. He rushed to the closet and looked under the bed, but no Jacques Fourney, no dumb Jean appeared. Then the man stood gazing at Dubarre in utter perplexity.

"They seem to have gone, Pierre. How was it?"

The other could only look at the window and mutter:

"It was closed when I left."

"Ah!"

Dubarre stepped quickly to the window and held a candle outside. There were footprints on the grass. He put the candle back on the mantel, fastened the shutters and closed the window. Then he looked at Pierre, and Pierre looked at him.

"They've gone," said Dubarre after a moment of staring. "Certainly our fellow countrymen act queerly. One cannot talk French, the other cannot talk at all. And now they leave us suddenly through a window."

"Well, one of them left a coat," remarked Pierre after the manner of a man seeking small comfort.

"How do you know that?"

"Because I have it on now myself, and a tight fit it is. I took it to keep him from running away while I went for you."

"What did he wear?"

Pierre looked all about the room and in the closet.

"Mon Dieu, he took yours, monsieur!" he said at last, with a wry grimace.

"My coat gone? My waistcoat, then?" asked Dubarre sharply.

Pierre brought it out. Dubarre felt in the pockets quickly.

"My signet ring gone, too," he cried, "and that's worse. At home it's a family treasure, here a family peril."

"How, monsieur?"

"Why, it points out the man on whom it is found as one England is hunting."

"I'll get it, monsieur." And Pierre started for the door.

"Come back!" cried Dubarre. "To claim it would bring disaster on both of us. Let's see the coat he left."

Pierre took off the garment and handed it to him. The dancing master looked it over, then tried it on.

"I'll travel in it since he got mine. What do you think?" He pulled at the coat to make it fit better. "'Tis lucky we are of a size, this strange Frenchman and I." Then he felt a small, hard substance. "Oho, a snuffbox!" he cried, pulling it from his pocket. "I'll test the brand monsieur the thief uses."

He opened the box, but it contained only a thin paper doubled and rolled into as small compass as possible. Dubarre straightened it out. As he looked at the paper his face changed suddenly.

"French refugees, Pierre! French renegades rather! Low born English spies, this Fourney and his man Jean. See! Look at this!" He held the paper toward the other in great excitement. "Indeed, we leave in good time!"

"Spies! Low English thieves!" cried Pierre, in turn looking at the paper.

"Come, come, Pierre!" exclaimed Dubarre. "You must away and at once. Kit stay until tomorrow to put out a false trail. Here!" He ran to the bed, and from a cunningly constructed hiding place drew out a bag of money. "Take this. Get your horse where we left it, at the second farm. Ride like mad to the cove. It's barely twenty-five miles. Have the boat lie off every night for a week, in case I am delayed. Three lights, triangle, in the rigging will be the sign. Are you ready?"

While he was talking, Pierre, with soldierlike alacrity, had been at work. Now he stood holding a small bundle of clothes that looked suspiciously like a mere excuse for hidden pistols.

"Monsieur, may not the spies come back for you?"

"No, no, Pierre, I'll risk it! I'll put out false reports to confuse Percy's, spies, English—all."

Some one knocked lightly at the door. Dubarre half drew a small clasp knife, then, remembering himself, went calmly to answer the knock.

"Bon voyage, Pierre," he whispered, his hand on the latch. Then he opened the door.

A girl muffled in a cape, with the hood drawn over her face, slipped quickly into the room. Astonished, Pierre started back. Dubarre put his finger to his lips.

"Until tomorrow night," he muttered to Pierre, and, bowing, the man slipped from the room.

Dubarre closed the door after him and turned to face his visitor.

CHAPTER VII.

"UNTIL tomorrow night?" The girl repeated it as a question. Then with a quick flirt she threw the shrouding hood aside, and May Percy stood before him.

A drizzling rain was falling without, and somehow a dozen drops or so had stolen under her hood to sparkle amid the black hair like diamonds. Her cheeks were red from hurrying. Her eyes, big, eager, questioning, sought his.

Dubarre drew a long breath. "Yes," he said.

May Percy gave a quick, relieved laugh. "Why, I need not have hurried so. You did not speak to me, so I came to tell you goodby."

She extended her hand. After a scant moment he dropped it, as something not to be safely held.

"Mademoiselle knew I was going?" he asked.

"Yes. Captain Thorncliffe told me."

Dubarre frowned. "The captain! I asked him not to tell."

"So he said. You were to leave early in the morning, and what a chance it was none of us would get to tell you goodby after you had been so kind. He was coming tonight, he thought, and I decided I would, too, because I was afraid I might not wake up in time and you would be gone."

She had rushed through it all in a breath, for Dubarre was still frowning. Now he bowed to her accordingly.

"Mademoiselle is very kind, but also very imprudent. Did mademoiselle bring her maid along?"

At that Mistress Percy's face showed only startled, innocent surprise.

"No. Why should I? I was not afraid. Besides"— She hesitated.

"Besides?" he asked.

"I did not want them to know," she blurted out impulsively.

"Want whom to know?"

"My father and Sir John."

"Sir John is mademoiselle's affianced husband," suggested the dancing master, with just a shade of reproof in his speech.

Blazing with sudden, splendid anger, Mistress Percy turned on him. "That does not entitle him to hold authority over me. I am not yet cramped within a wedding ring, thank heaven!"

"Mademoiselle!" His tone was wholly reproving now, but that served only to enrage her the more.

"Oh, you needn't take his part. I believe all you men are alike. I hate you all. I'm sure I do." And, whirling away from him, she stood drumming her fingers on the table. Dubarre shook his head despairingly. When he spoke it was in a suave, soothing tone.

"Mademoiselle is excited. May I get a glass of water for mademoiselle?"

May Percy turned back impatiently. "Now, don't take that tone. You'll be like my father next. I say some one has been kind to me, and I will see him to say goodby and thank him, and then, forsooth, Sir John"—she paused, then went on with sneering contempt—"the righteous, proper Sir John, who has lost half a fortune at cards and fought once about a girl, must throw up his hands in holy horror and my father grow sarcastic and suggest that I go over tonight to pay a formal visit to express my thanks in person for a paid service. Oh, I despise you men!"

Then with a quick flirt she threw the shrouding hood aside.

She was miserably angry, but of a sudden her old April self predominated. An arch smile broke through the clouds on her face, and a gay laugh at some new thought swept away all trace of gloom.

"Do you really suppose, monsieur, my father meant that seriously? Am I not a dutiful daughter?" She stopped, struggling to contain her laughter.

At the angry outburst Dubarre had started to walk up and down the room. This last change was too much for a man helplessly, hopelessly in love. There was but one salvation. He stopped and bowed stiffly.

"I have one favor which I wish to ask of mademoiselle."

It was a command.

Mistress Percy drew herself up proudly. "And you, sir, I suppose, have one favor to ask of me. I am properly punished for coming here. My only business with you is to say goodby and—and—remember you have been absolutely rude and fought with Sir John over cards."

Dubarre, tempted past all endurance, bit his lip. "A dozen would be sincere," he blurted, in sudden anger.

For a moment May Percy looked at him helplessly. Then the meaning of it all swept over her. She drew a long breath, while her eyes grew big and serious.

"Then monsieur is"—

He interrupted quietly. "Monsieur Dubarre, your French dancing master." Next he drew back and, with a low bow, added, "To Mistress Percy, grand lady."

Slowly the exquisite faded out of the girl's face. Her head drooped as she held out her hand kindly.

"Forgive me, monsieur. I did not mean to intrude upon a possible secret."

"Mademoiselle's own heart's kindness makes her forgiveness," he said hastily.

"And I shall think"—

Dubarre shrugged his shoulders. "There's a foolish man who would try to curb a woman's thought, mademoiselle."

She continued, "That a French gentleman, a soldier perhaps, has honored a little English girl by teaching her to dance."

Now he shook his head, smiling slightly, but when he spoke his tone was deeply serious.

"And a poor French dancing master will know that is but Dieu permits sometimes out of his own bright skies to steal down from above to give those struggling below joy one hour. Fortunate, I presume of the kingdom of le bon Dieu. Then—he watches it away."

With a shrug, the man walked to the mantel and leaned against it, dejected, hopeless beyond further speech. The girl's face was a reflection of his attitude. After a pause she spoke timidly. "But the children from above, as you call them, they stay on earth, monsieur."

He turned and came to her quickly, sudden resolve in every movement.

"Mademoiselle," he said, and now he turn his face was eager, "could a man pretend to be what he is not?"

"That would depend, monsieur," she interrupted softly.

"Suppose, mademoiselle"—Dubarre spoke more carefully, weighing every word—"suppose a man had sworn an oath to her he loved best in the world"—May Percy started—"suppose, mademoiselle"— He smiled. "Ah, this is all a leetle game of suppose—that young man gets release from his chief, forswears his friends, for a time gives up his life and, meanly attired, at great peril attempts to follow out the oath made to her he loved most as she lay dying."

The Frenchman paused. His quick eye had noted the girl's signs of embarrassment.

"Is the leetle game of suppose too long, mademoiselle?"

"Go on, monsieur." Her tone was ample encouragement. He took up the game again more eagerly.

"Suppose, then, mademoiselle, he fulfills his oath. Could you"—a moment he paused for a word—"respect that man?"

"Yes—yes, monsieur," she cried impulsively.

Dubarre shook his head, smiling sadly.

"You speak too quick, mademoiselle. The game, our leetle 'suppose' game, is not finished. Suppose, mademoiselle, that young man met danger, great danger, greater than he knew. You know the danger, mademoiselle. It is the light that le bon Dieu puts by life's sea to save or wreck men—a woman. If he steers headlong, reckless, willing to die on the rocks, if only struggling for that light, could you—could you think such a man worthy?" He paused for a reply.

May Percy stood at the edge of dreamland, looking into the far away. At last she spoke, and it was very soft.

"You say the danger is sent by God, monsieur? Then man should try to conquer it."

He stepped toward her, his arms outstretched impulsively. "Mademoiselle, you are"—

She straightened and looked at him quickly. He stopped, for in that look there was some strange mingling of weakness, of sad determination against desire and of appeal that awed him. When she spoke, in so far as it could the tone echoed the look.

"As you were about to say, the affianced wife of Sir John Wilmerding, and you a French gentleman, monsieur."

He stepped back and bowed deeply, then moved toward the door.

"May I have the honor of seeing mademoiselle safely to the house?"

And then, almost as he said it, the door shook from a mighty pounding.

Behind the Guns.

"My proudest boast," said the lecturer, who expected his statement to be greeted with cheers, "is that I was one of the men behind the guns."

"How many miles behind?" piped a voice in the gallery.—London Answers.

HORSE HINTS

How They Have Improved a Breed and Industry

In the 17th Century a wave of enthusiasm swept over England and France when the medical profession discovered such wonderful curative elements in the cod's liver.

In the 18th Century cod liver oil was imported and used extensively by physicians in this country, but it was found to be adulterated to a great extent and the unfair heavy oil which enveloped the medicinal elements, to great hindrance to its medicinal value.

In 1885 a famous physician from The Hague went to Norway and after two years of experiment and research produced a light brown oil from the cods' livers which was said to be more valuable than the pale yellow oil, but the taste and odor was so repulsive that it frequently caused such nausea that it made it unpopular.

The most valuable discovery however, was later made by two eminent French chemists, who after years of research discovered an extractive and concentrating process by which all of the medicinal, healing and body building elements of the cod's liver are separated from the useless and nauseating oil, these recovered medicinal elements combined with peptonate of iron make Vinol the most scientific and valuable cod liver preparation which the world has ever known.

Vinol is so rich in the elements of life that it imparts vigor to all debilitated and feeble conditions and is unexcelled as a remedy for all pulmonary troubles.

Try Vinol on our guarantee to return your money if it fails to give satisfaction. Upchurch Drug Co., Clanton, Ala.

TAX NOTICE.

Assessor's and Collector's

SECOND ROUND.

We will attend at the following times and places for the purpose of collecting the State and County taxes of Chilton county, for the year 1907, and assessing the taxes for the year 1908:

You can't be healthy if you have a weak, unhealthy, tired out stomach. Neither can you feel good if by some little irregularity in eating you have caused the stomach to get out of order. These little stomach troubles are signs of indigestion, which may and very often does turn into a very bad case of dyspepsia. Don't allow this to go on a single day without doing something to overcome it. Take some good reasonable and safe digestant like KODOL for dyspepsia. KODOL is the best remedy known today for heartburn, belching and all troubles arising from a disordered digestion. It is pleasant to take and affords relief promptly. Sold by Upchurch Drug co.

Editor Banner—As I have never written to the Banner before, please allow me space to say a few words.

Quite a large number of boys and girls attended the goober parching at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Culver Thursday night last and reported a nice time. The entertainment at Mr. Claud Culver's Saturday night was quite a success. We know that little heart has recovered from her fall. Prof. Jones and wife attended the ball game in Birmingham and reported a nice time.

Miss Maie Cox is visiting her sister, Mrs. Joe Conningham at Riderville. Misses Pearl and Hazel Miller spent Sunday with Miss Effie and Georgia Dyer. We would like to hear from "Brown Eyed Girl," as we haven't heard from her in some time. Will ring off. If this escapes the waste basket will come again.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson IX.—Fourth Quarter, For Dec. 1, 1907.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Judg. xvi. 21-31. Memory Verses, 28-30—Golden Text, Eph. vi., 10—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1907, by American Press Association.]

One of God's chosen men, a Nazarite and the strongest of men physically, brought to a prison house, grinding corn, and afterward brought to a public gathering of many thousands to make sport for them as they worshiped their god, made blind physically by his spiritually blinded enemies, this is truly a sad sight. Yet it is written for our benefit that we may not thus bring reproach upon our God nor grieve His Holy Spirit. As we saw last week and in previous lessons and as the whole Bible teaches, God is seeking for men who will walk continuously with Him, follow Him fully and in whom He can be magnified.

In Heb. xi, 32, we find Gideon, Barak, Samson and Jephtha mentioned with David and Samuel as men of faith, and in the long list of worthies in that chapter the distinguishing feature of each is faith in God. Even in Samson's dying hour we find him in verse 28 of our lesson praying the prayer of faith and receiving an immediate answer. We must glance at the whole story of Samson (chapters xiii to xvi inclusive), and in chapter xiii we note the visit of the Lord to Manoah and his wife, the same one who appeared to Gideon and Joshua, who talked face to face with Moses, appeared to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and clothed Adam and Eve with coats of skins in Eden, whose goings forth have been from the days of eternity (Mic. v, 2, margin). He is called in the present story an angel twelve times, a man five times and God once (verse 22). When Manoah asked for His name He said, "It is wonderful" (xiii, 18, margin), making us think of Isa ix, 6, 7. As He ascended in the flame of Manoah's sacrifice it is said that He did wondrously, and Manoah and his wife looked on (xiii, 19). It was even so at the exodus, the dividing of the Red sea and the Jordan, the overthrow of Jericho, and long afterward in the days of His sojourn upon earth when in the presence of the disciples He wrought so many miracles. He is the same yesterday, today and forever.

In chapters xiv and xv the power of God is seen in Samson in his slaying a lion, in his killing 1,000 men with the jawbone of an ass, in his carrying off the city gates and walking away with the weaver's beam fastened to his locks, etc. God's care of him is seen in His bringing water from the dry bone for him when he was thirsty and in other ways. He could not have been a great man physically, else people would not have wondered wherein his great strength lay, but he was a Nazarite (xiii, 5), for an explanation of which see Num. vi, but he was a Nazarite whose separation had been defiled and his days lost (Num. vi, 12). One part of the chastening for this was to shave the head, and this his enemies did for him.

In verse 22 of our lesson we read that the hair of his head began to grow again, and in this we see his Nazariteship returning in a measure. But, oh, the lost days and the dishonor to God! And here we must touch upon something most practical and searching, briefly hinted at in last week's temperance lesson. At the judgment seat of Christ all that has been of self in our lives will be seen to be only wood, hay and stubble, fit to be burned to our loss. A true child of God cannot be lost, but his life or part of it may be lost. All Samson's wandering from God by contact with sinful people was lost time, and, not only so, it was God dishonoring time. All the years that Israel was in the hands of her enemies, overcome by them because of her sin, during the days of these judges was time not counted by God, and this explains one of the seeming discrepancies of Scripture. In I Kings, vi, 1, we read that from the exodus to the fourth year of Solomon was 480 years, while in Acts xiii, 18-22, it is easily seen to be 573 years (40+450+40+40+40+3), a discrepancy of ninety-three years. How interesting it is that we find just these years lost by Israel as a nation while oppressed by their enemies! The record of the years of their oppressions is in iii, 8, 14; iv, 3; vi, 1; xiii, 1, and the figures are 8+18+20+7+40=93, which, subtracted from 573, gives 480, making perfect agreement in the two accounts. There is another oppression of eighteen years mentioned in Judg. x, 8, but it was only partial and confined to the east of Jordan. May the Lord deliver us from all Dalilahs and from wasting or misusing His time or talents or opportunities!

Because of Samson's sin we see the Philistines rejoicing in their idol Dagon and worshiping it. That is the devil, for all idol worship is of the devil (I Cor. x, 20). When children of God conform to this world they give great occasion to the enemy to blaspheme.

How humiliating to see such a one as Samson making sport for the Philistines, yet there are today professing Christians so blinded that they think it all right to make sport for or amuse the world's people and, in fact, often do it to obtain money for what they call the Lord's work! If we are true Nazarites we will desire that God may be glorified in us, whether by life or death (Phil. i, 20), but we will also seek to keep ourselves unspotted from the world (Jas. i, 27).

No Fires to Cook Their Turkeys.

Two hundred thousand people in twenty Missouri towns awoke on Nov. 29 last to learn that there was no fuel with which to cook their Thanksgiving turkeys. The natural gas, the only fuel used in this part of the state, was unobtainable owing to the bursting of a sixteen inch main at Altamont, Kan. Discarded stoves were dragged from cellars and storage rooms, and there was a scramble for fuel. In most of the homes the turkeys were served accordingly rare.

BUTTER BY THE YARD.

The Way It Is Sold, Pats and Scores, in Cambridge, England.

In Cambridge, England, butter is sold by the yard. For generations it has been the practice of Cambridgeshire dairy folk to sell their butter into lengths, each length measuring a yard and weighing a pound. Daily wrapped in strips of clean white cloth, the cylindrical rolls are packed in long, narrow baskets made for the purpose and thus conveyed to market. The butter women who, in white linen aprons and sleeves, preside over the stalls in the market here no need of weights or scales for dispensing their wares. Constant practice and experienced eyes enable them with a stroke of the knife to divide a yard of butter into halves or quarters with almost mathematical exactness.

The university people are the chief buyers of this curiously shaped product. In addition to being famed for its purity and sweetness Cambridge "yard butter" is eminently adapted for being served to the students in the daily commons. Cut in conveniently sized pieces and accompanied by a loaf of the best wheat bread, a stated portion is sent round every morning to the rooms of the undergraduates for use at breakfast and tea.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Thought He Knew Him.

A laborer was engaged in the grounds of an asylum and received instructions to pay no attention whatever to the remarks of the patients.

Some little time after he commenced work the governor of the asylum, a well known doctor, looking at the progress of the work, mildly suggested one alteration. The workman dug steadily on and never lifted his head.

The doctor raised his voice, but the man, without answering, went on digging energetically. The doctor threatened, stormed and finally thundered out:

"Do you know who I am?"

The laborer straightened his back, looked at him a minute and, shaking his head, sorrowfully exclaimed:

"Poor chap! I am sorry for ye," and went on calmly with his work.—London Express.

A Monster Spring.

No state in the Union has larger or more numerous springs than Florida. Many of them form good sized streams from the start, and some of them are navigable. The largest spring in the state, and one of the largest and probably the best known in the United States, is Silver spring, which is located six miles east of Ocala. This spring forms the source of the Ocklawaha river, a tributary of the St. Johns, and steamboats traversing the river enter the spring basin, which has an area of several acres. The water is from twenty-five to thirty feet deep and is wonderfully clear, appearing absolutely devoid of color.—Minneapolis Journal.

Etiquette Not Involved.

Mrs. Hendricks (the landlady)—Can I help you to some more soup, Mr. Dumley?

Mr. Dumley—No, thanks.

Mrs. Hendricks (engagingly)—Don't refuse, Mr. Dumley, because it isn't considered good form to be helped twice to soup. We're not particular people here.

Mr. Dumley—Oh, etiquette has nothing to do with it, madam. It's the soup.—Pearson's Weekly.

Didn't Half Try.

Father—How's this, Harold? I hear you have been as bad as you could be today. What have you got to say for yourself? Small Harold—Please don't believe all you hear, papa. I could have been a whole lot worse.—Chicago News.

ALWAYS WAS SICK.

When a man says he always was sick—troubled with a cough that lasted all winter—what would you think if he should say—he never was sick since using Ballard's Horehound Syrup. Such a man exists.

Mr. J. C. Clark, Denver, Colorado, writes: "For years I was troubled with a severe cough that would last all winter. This cough left me in a miserable condition. I tried Ballard's Horehound Syrup and have not had a sick day since. That's what it did for me." Sold by Upchurch Drug Co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thorsby.

Non-Resident Notice.

The State of Alabama, Chilton County.
Chancery Court. 7th District, Northeastern Division.
Josephine Perry, Complainant, vs. Clay Perry, Defendant.

In this cause it is made to appear to the Register, by the affidavit on file of W. M. Adams, Solicitor for Complainant, that the Defendant, Clay Perry, is a non-resident of the State of Alabama; that Defendant's present residence is unknown, and further that to the belief of said affiant, the Defendant, Clay Perry, is over the age of twenty-one years.

It is therefore ordered by the Register, that publication be made in the Banner, a newspaper published in Clanton, Ala., once a week for four consecutive weeks, requiring the said Clay Perry, to answer, plead or demur to the bill of complaint in this cause on or before the 26th day of December, and failing so to do within thirty days after the service of this summons, a decree pro confesso may be entered against him in said cause.

Witness my hand, this 5th day of November, 1907.

S. A. STEWART, Register in Chancery.

WORMS

All children complain from worms, most "their stomachs hurt," and that they "don't feel good." This condition is a common one and the trouble is almost invariably due to pin worms.

Children haven't the strength to combat their ills and independence without the aid of some reliable medicine.

Dr. Caldwell's (Laxative) Syrup Pepsin

is an unfailing, harmless and absolute cure for worms, stomach and bowel troubles, and can be used as freely for either baby or the bigger child, as for full grown folks.

If your child seems indisposed, feverish, restful, peevish, and all out of sorts, these are symtoms of worms. One dose of DR. CALDWELL'S SYRUP PEPSIN as directed, the dejected condition will soon give way to health and vigor.

DR. CALDWELL'S SYRUP PEPSIN can be obtained in both dollar and half-dollar sizes from all druggists.

Your money will be refunded if it does not benefit you.

Your postal card request will bring by return mail our new booklet "DR. CALDWELL'S BOOK OF WONDERS" and free sample to those who have never used this wonderful remedy. Write today.

MODERN SURGERY.

The Whole and Elaborate System of Surroundings.

The scene at an operating table in one of our hospitals now would make one of the old masters of surgery stare. The operator himself and all his staff are dressed like the old holy priests of Solomon's temple, wearing white caps and gowns, with the nurses standing around the priestesses all in spotless white, while every one about the table has gone through an many ablutions as befits the occasion of a bloody sacrifice under the auspices of the immaculate goddess of cleanliness. A minute and elaborate ritual has been observed of sterilizing everything—towels, threads, needles, forceps, instruments and what not—while the floor itself is made of glass or glazed tiles rather than of wood. The surgeon himself does not venture to cut the victim till he has put on his sterilized gloves, because he cannot possibly clean his fingers enough. Should any onlooker take his hand out of his pocket to reach for the gaping wound he would be ejected instanter for spoiling the whole performance with his defiling touch.

The results of this vigilant war against microbes are simply marvelous and can be fully appreciated only by those who, like myself, can remember the surgery of former days in hospital wards and on the battlefield.—Everybody's Magazine.

Lighted Streets in Europe.

The best lighted street in Europe, declares a weekly paper, is Unter den Linden, in Berlin. Perhaps it is, but we would not be sure. In the torrent seamed hills of the Jura, where water power is as cheap as anywhere in the world, there are little French villages in which every tiny cottage has its electric light installation, and the central street, that one could almost jump across, is flooded by the beams of arc lamps that would do credit to the Strand. However, the Berlin boulevard, otherwise a disappointing thoroughfare, is certainly well illuminated. Plate glass, Pilsener and policemen, are the three most striking features of that capital, but the lighting of the streets is a good fourth.—London News.

Moments That Counted.

Bacon's fame is mainly due to books written in his spare hours while he was England's chancellor. Humboldt's days were so occupied with his business that he had to pursue his scientific labors in the night or early morning. Burns wrote his most beautiful poems in his spare moments while working on a farm. Grote wrote his "History of Greece" during the odds and ends of time snatched from his duty as a banker. "Moments are the golden sands of time" if rightly used.

Grass Eggs.

When a hen is made sick eating too freely of grass she lays what are known as "grass eggs." Grass eggs are poor stuff. They have an unpleasant flavor, and the yolk wabbles around in a weak and watery white and is green and dull in color. The term is one applied by candlers, who discover while testing that there is a pale greenish hue to the eggs and that they are not at all of the bright, fresh color that we find in healthy eggs.—Baltimore American.

What He Wanted.

A very baldheaded man went into the barber shop in the American House in our town and, plumping himself down in the chair, said:

"Hair cut."

Ed, the barber, looked at him a moment and replied:

"Why, man, you don't need no hair cut. What you want is a shine."—Life.

How to Cure a Cold.

Be as careful as you can you will occasionally take cold, and when you do, get a medicine of known ability, one that has an established reputation and that is certain to effect a quick cure. Such a medicine is Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It has gained a world wide reputation by its remarkable cures of this most common ailment, and can always be depended upon. It assists nature, allays the lungs, aids expectoration, opens the secretions and aids nature in restoring the system to a healthy condition. During the many years in which it has been in general use we have yet to learn of a single case of cold or attack of the grip having resulted in pneumonia when this remedy was used, which shows conclusively that it is a certain preventive of that dangerous disease. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. For sale by Upchurch Drug co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thorsby.

THE FEATHER BED.

It Is a Poor Thing to Use Either in Summer or Winter.

"Few people, even physicians themselves, seem to know the principal reason why modern science condemns the use of feather beds in winter as well as in summer," said a New York physician recently.

"It is because feather beds are highly hygroscopic—a rather formidable word, but one meaning simply that feathers readily absorb and condensate moisture. The body is constantly throwing off waste matter through the skin and the lungs. The feathers in the bed will absorb this waste matter as readily as it will simple atmospheric moisture. The feathers retain the waste matter during the day, when the bed is cold, even when it is aired, unless also warmed by sunshine during the time it is exposed to the air.

"At night, when the body of the sleeper warms the bed, the feathers renew their hygroscopic action and throw off the waste matter absorbed the night before. The susceptible body of the sleeper is soon surrounded by a dense and highly poisonous atmosphere, the accumulative effect of which cannot help but be very injurious.

"The skin, like the lungs, is continually breathing and is very sensitive to external influences; hence arises the need for air baths as well as for water baths. The entire body should be exposed to fresh air every day for as long a time as you can make possible, and all beds should be thoroughly ventilated."—New York Times.

COTTON IN INDIA.

The Way It Was Discovered by a Man Who Was an Observer.

A remarkable story is told about the discovery of the cotton plant in India some years ago. Two gentlemen were driving out to dinner near Bombay, one the host and the other his guest. On both sides of the road were hedges.

It was getting dark, but the guest noticed some white stuff on the top of the hedges all the way along and at length told his friend that he thought it looked like cotton. His friend ordered the native driver to stop, and the two Englishmen got down and examined. The guest was right. It was cotton of an extraordinary strong staple.

Both men were cotton experts, and yet the host, who had driven along the same road for years, had passed the cotton without recognising it. The guest immediately proceeded to buy up these hedges, for except them there were none that he had seen during a twelve years' residence in India.

During his investigations he discovered that natives often had one or two cotton trees in their gardens, and the English club compounds possessed three or four in different parts of India, but nowhere except in this Bombay district did he see cotton growing in such luxuriant abundance.

He bought up every tree and plant he could, for not a single native European imagined that it was a cotton tree that he possessed in his garden.—

Claim of Central Figure in Recent C versy Is Novel.

The new theory advanced by L. T. Cooper relative to the human stomach has attracted such widespread attention that the public in cities visited by the young man has been joined by many physicians in a discussion of his beliefs and medicines.

Mr. Cooper says that human health is dependent almost entirely upon the stomach. He says that no disease can be conquered without first alleviating all stomach disorders. He further says that most men and women of this generation are half-sick, owing to degenerate stomachs. And lastly, he claims that his New Discovery medicine will rejuvenate the human stomach in 30 days.

Cooper has been traveling from one city to another, conducting in each what he calls a campaign of education. For the past year he has met the public in the larger cities of the country, and his success has been phenomenal. Thousands of people have flocked to his headquarters wherever he has gone, and the sale of his medicine has been beyond anything of the kind ever before witnessed.

Possibly the most interesting feature of the attention this young man has attracted is what his army of followers, whom he has converted to his beliefs through his medicines, have to say on the subject. The following statements are from two well known residents of Chicago and Boston, respectively, and the enthusiasm of these in characteristic of Cooper's admirers generally.

Mrs. H. B. Mack, of 2201 State street, Chicago, says: "I have been suffering for 12 years from a combination of stomach troubles, catarrh and constipation. I had a gnawing pain in the pit of my stomach, a sort of a dull pain that I could not describe. Then there were aches, and my mind was wandering continually. I was out, and what little food I could not retain on my I tried every remedy I and also tried out a medicines, but without result. It was through friends that I heard of Cooper's methods, and I determined to try some of it. It is since I took my first dose I feel like a new woman. The aches seems to have the pain in my stomach it. The medicine is worth in gold, and I want to Cooper for what he has me."

Mr. Edwin F. Morse, street, Dorchester, a town, says: "For three not a well day. My frightful shape; the most food would nauseate me, had a horror of anything solid food would cause indigestion, bloating and stomach, and nothing Some time ago I got Cooper's medicines, there is no such talk. CLOTHES AND THE MAN.

Study the Lord of Creation and the Things He Wears.

See the man!

He wears a hat of straw, stiffened with glue until it is like a tin pail, or of felt or silk, stiffened with bum shellac until it is like a cast iron pot. Inside this unyielding brim is a thick band of hard, stiff leather, re-enforced with inner bands of flannel. Result, compression of the blood vessels of the scalp, causing undue perspiration, headache and baldness.

About his neck in summer is a turn-down collar, which is a high, stiff fence of eight thicknesses of starched linen. This fits closely, leaving him unable to turn his head without great effort. Imbedded in this and tied in front in a thick, uncomfortable bunch is a tie of heavy cotton or silk, re-enforced with linings of quilted canton flannel.

His shirt has a stiff, unyielding front of the firmness of a priest's breastplate. This must be donned with dexterity and worn with care lest it break or bend. His waistcoat is made of heavy woolen cloth, and in summer he wears one of heavier, thicker and warmer duck or cheviot. This warmth and thickness, however, are only in front, where nature has already protected the lungs and heart. At his back, where protection is required against draft or chill, the waistcoat is of thin muslin.

His coat is built similarly, the fronts being re-enforced with lapels of many linings.

About his waist he buckles a belt so tightly as to interfere with breathing and circulation, yet can rarely get it tight enough to achieve its own purpose.

For this reason he must wear suspenders, which are probably the most uncomfortable garment known.

He carries a stick which has no pretense to use or beauty.

He has dozens of pockets into which he never puts anything.

He has buttons which button nothing and buttonholes which are not to be used.

He has strange jewelry of clumsy intent. Great buttons of uncouth shape must be thrust through stiffly starched layers of linen. Collar buttons must be lost and hunted for.

He has rings on his fingers, pins in his scarf, chains across his breast, fobs dangling from his pockets and studs in his shirts.

He is not what he was created, but is what he has created.

Is the man a savage?

No; he is the lord of creation!—Life.

There is a number of people who are under an erroneous impression. They think that they never control enough money to start a bank account. In this they are mistaken. We solicit small accounts as well as large. And we handle the business of both with our best care. We believe that you ought to have a bank account, and we offer you our services.

THE CLANTON BANK
CLANTON, ALA.

Many people seem to think that unless they can open a Savings Account with not less than $50.00 or $100.00, it is not worth the while to begin. This is not a correct position to take. If a person cannot open an account with more than $1.00, and really desires to get some money ahead, then he should begin with even $1.00. The first dollar saved and put in bank, is the initial step on the way to prosperity. "Great oaks from little acorns grow." As a rule, the person who "Runs off" the opening of a Savings Account until he has a large amount to deposit, is one likely to ever have a bank account. We solicit your account.

Birmingham, Dec. 2, 1907

Editor Banner—I trust that you will not consider me taking up too much of your paper in answering Mr. Robinson, but I wish to say in conclusion that I have given him all facts from the beginning, notwithstanding the fact that I have asked him questions in every letter, but not one has he answered.

I would like to ask Mr. Robinson to show me where any good can come from whiskey? I have been unable to see where whiskey has been any help to the children or the people of our fair land, and I don't believe I have lost quite all of my mind since writing to the Banner. Mr. Robinson seems to think in the opposite direction.

I expect to fight the liquor question as long as I live. Nothing upon the face of our land brings as much destruction as liquor, and for one girl down with my mouth shut for the sake of a little tax money gotten from some poor man, who by fortune have not been so blessed as we, I feell assured God will welcome any movement that enables us to be of service in our present occupation. "We can do all things through Christ who strengthens us." And let us all be willing to do what He would have us do. Respectfully yours,

There is something about Kennedy's Laxative Cough Syrup that makes it different from others, as it gives a free yet gentle action of the bowels through which the cold is loosened out of the system. At the same time it heals irritation and inflammation and allays inflammation in the throat and lungs. It is pleasant to take. Children like it. Contains no opiates nor narcotics. Sold by Upchurch Drug co.

Plantersville, Ala., Dec. 2, 1907

Editor Banner—Will you allow me just a little space in your valuable paper as it has been a very long time since I wrote to the dear Banner. Health of our community is very good at present but hard times are serving some of our people very bad, but just so we have a few potatoes to roast we'll get along all right. Oh! not changing the subject at all, but isn't it terrible that so many young girls as there is in Chilton and Autauga counties, that one young lady can come into our midst and captivate all the young men around us. Cheer up girls, look your best and let's don't get beat every time. Let us cheer ourselves and see if we can't get to the front. By the way there are a great many visiting down. Mrs. M. V. Chandler visited the home of Mrs. Logan. Mrs. Stillwell has been visiting her friends near Plantersville the past week. Misses Davis and Jodie Cook and Lula Logan visited the Misses Effie and Aree Chandler Sunday evening and report a swell time. Misses Effie and Aree Chandler of Selma are visiting their mother at Plantersville; we truly hope they will have a good time, they intend to stay till Xmas. Boy, all of you people who have turkey for Xmas, please save me the wish bone. I hope everybody will be lively this Christmas. Someone like to have got lively before Xmas. The singing at Mr. Cook's was enjoyed by all present. With best wishes for Xmas, I remain, C. M. P.

War and Wine.

He was a gallant colonel of militia, but scarcely a good horseman. Owning even large and popular emporiums on even the best of Edinburgh's best streets does not of itself breed centaurs.

His mount was fresh to an extreme, and the silent figure of Sir Walter Scott, looking down upon the assembling troops from its marble pedestal, may well have expected to see an accident. That, too, was probably the thought of a small street urchin who loitered just out of reach of the prancing hoofs.

"Boy, get away!" exclaimed the ruffled rider testily. "Have you never seen a war horse?"

"Aye," came the answer, "but never a wear rider."—Dundee Advertiser.

FIVE PEOPLE KILLED

Flagman and Conductor of Trolley Car Arrested.

NO CHANCE TO STOP THE CAR

Loaded With Passengers at Cross-ing—Brakes Cared for by Motorman Given.

Waterbury, Conn., Nov. 29.—Five factory employes were killed at the Oliver Main street crossing over the Highland division tracks of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad when an extra Hartford bound freight train crashed into a trolley car, obstructing 35 persons bound for the pin factories in Oakville. The car was struck with great force directly in the middle and all the passengers killed were badly mangled. Six others were badly injured and had to be carried to their homes.

Flagman John Flavin and Conductor John Dillon of the trolley car, were arrested. The motorman of the car, Charles Leonard, was not held.

It is stated that the wrecked trolley car was following closely behind another car which had passed over the crossing.

It is customary to drop the gates at this crossing on the approach of a train, but in this instance the gates were up.

The flagman in charge of the gates, shortly before the accident, left his post to go to his home to get his dinner. He says that he signaled the approaching train to stop, but that the engineer paid no attention to his signals. The motorman of the trolley car says that he applied the brakes, but that they refused to work properly, and he was unable to stop. The bodies of those killed were taken charge of by undertakers.

ATLANTA GETS NEXT MEETING.

Southeastern District, International Association Machinists Union Has Adjourned.

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 29.—The convention of the southeastern district, International Machinists Association, which convened here Monday, adjourned to meet next year in Atlanta. The uniform waste scale was discussed, at length, and is to be passed on by higher officials.

Officers were elected for ensuing term as follows:

Arch McGillivray, Birmingham, president; E. Tacon, Mobile, first vice president; T. J. Wright, Nashville, second vice president; Frank Hamilton, Roanoke, Va., third vice president; J. F. Ashwood, High Springs, Fla., fourth vice president; P. P. Morgan, Jackson, Tenn., fifth vice president; James E. Drake, Birmingham, secretary-treasury.

BRYAN FOUND GUILTY.

Minister is Suspended for a Period of One Year.

Brunswick, Ga., Nov. 29.—The committee appointed to investigate the charges of immorality made against Rev. S. H. Bryan, who was formerly pastor of the Methodist church at Millen, has made its report to the conference.

The report of the committee was made soon after conference opened Thursday morning.

Sousa Considerably Improved.

Chicago, Nov. 29.—Bandmaster John Philip Sousa, who arrived at the Auditorium hotel Thursday suffering from ptomaine poisoning, had a restful sleep last night and was considerably improved Friday. House physician Hammond said there was no cause for alarm, but that it would be necessary for Mr. Sousa to remain quiet for some days. It is probable that Mr. Sousa will stay in Chicago until Monday.

Guiseppe Colt's Kidnaper Caught

Naples, Nov. 29.—The kidnaping of Marquis Guiseppe Colt, a cousin of the king of Italy, Emmanuel, who after being tortured and forced to give up $50,000 was released by his captors, has caused great astonishment through the discovery that the organizer of the plot is in reality a policeman. On being arrested he confessed.

Governors to Fight Sunday Saloons.

Chicago, Nov. 30.—Governor Folk of Missouri; Governor Hanley, of Indiana, and former Mayor Jones, of Minneapolis, are to be asked to make a visit to Chicago's Sunday saloon closing fight. Invitations for the two governors to come to Chicago and speak on reform and enforcement of the closing law have been sent.

Want Armament Reduction.

Victoria, British Columbia, Nov. 29.—Advices received from Japan state that several Japanese newspapers are calling for a reduction in Japan's armament on the ground that Japan's army is more expensive than the country can afford.

DEPUTIES SWORN IN.

Posse Will Assemble Where Needed Most to Quell.

Montgomery, Ala., Nov. 29.—The only development of the day in the legislative affairs of the state was the action of the state house in the qualifying and swearing in of the deputies by the United States marshall.

It is well known that additional deputies are sworn in, as well as to be ready for any violation of the orders of the court as to serve the papers.

Some of the most fearless men who have been in the service in the east have been secured, and it is given out that the court is determined that there shall be the most complete observance of the orders. It is anticipated here that the order will be disobeyed, the feeling being that the people would like to get a test case.

A feature of the situation is that any suit brought for violation of the state acts now under restraint will be fought to the bitter end, if the party loses, the costs will be a young fortune.

The only other road expected to join the fighters is the Western of Alabama, which will likely file papers by Saturday.

President Smith and General Counsel Stone, of the Louisville and Nashville, left Friday for their homes in Louisville. They will be back for the hearing Monday.

Order from Judge Jones.

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 29.—The order of the notes of Judge Thomas G. Jones, in the railroad rate cases this morning, caused considerable excitement in the federal building, and arrangements were at once made by the United States marshal for putting on many deputies in every town in south Alabama. The sheriff, constables and other court officials in the state.

ALBANY WOMAN USED REVOLVER

She Was Alone in House at Time Burglar Entered.

Albany, Ga., Nov. 29.—Hearing some one trying to force an entrance at the back door of her home, on Jefferson street, Mrs. D. C. Betterton, who was in the house alone, quickly secured a revolver and went out to face the burglar.

When she asked who was at the door, hurried, footsteps were her only answer. She quickly threw open the door and fired her revolver at the fleeing burglar. When the smoke of battle cleared away there were tracks of two men in the yard.

Albany has been infested with burglars for two weeks. This is the second attempt that has been made by burglarian the Betterson home.

"Optimine Tuberculin Test."

Ann Arbor, Mich., Nov. 29.—Thirty of the senior law students of the University of Michigan have submitted themselves to the new "optimine tuberculin test" to determine whether there are any tuberculous germs in the body. The liquid is prepared from clean cultures of the tubercle bacillus, but precipitated in alphlet and instead of being injected like Koch's lymph, it is dropped into the subject's eye. If the disease is in existence in the body, it will be manifested in eight or ten hours. Of the subjects not one showed any reaction while patients in the hospital it was very manifest.

New York to Paris in Auto.

New York, Nov. 29.—The first definite entry for the automobile race from New York to Paris, which will be under the direction of Le Matin, the Paris newspaper, comes from an American. He will drive a 22-horse power car and is enthusiastic over the plans for the race. Le Matin originated the race last summer from Pekin to Paris, which was a great success. The route for the proposed race is from New York across the continent to the Pacific coast, through Alaska, across Bering straits, through Siberia and Russia and thence through Germany and France to Paris.

Suicides With Phonograph at Play.

New York, Nov. 29.—Turning on the gas and a phonograph at the same time, Mrs. Gertrude Tuttle, aged 35, committed suicide at her home in the strains of "In the Wildwood Where the Bluebells Grow," her favorite air. She was despondent because of ill health.

Leaves for Washington.

Savannah, Ga., Nov. 29.—Congressman Charles G Edwards, the only one of the whom there will be but one member of the national house of representatives passing, left Thursday with Mrs. Edwards for Washington, where he will be sworn in on Monday.

A GAIN OF $32,723,933

Georgia's State Taxable Values Compiled by Comptroller.

HANDSOME INCREASE MADE

The Statement Shows that There Are 31,171,072 Acres of Improved Land in the State of Georgia, Valued at $266,666,752.

Atlanta, Nov. 30.—An increase of $32,723,905 in the taxable values of the state's property is shown in the tabulated statement just completed in the office of Comptroller General W. A. Wright by Captain "Tip" Harrison, and shows that the last year saw the state grow rich, indeed.

This is the gain after the tax books from the 146 counties in the state had been checked up, revised, and added up. In addition to these totals the statement is replete with interesting data which shows the prosperity which visited the state up to the time the tax books closed in the spring.

When it comes down to the question of lands, this statement shows that there are 31,171,072 acres of improved land in the state, valued at $166,666,752, and 4,676,134 acres of wild land, valued at [illegible], making a total of 35,846,190 acres of land, with a total value of [illegible].

[illegible] again is placed at $169,770,647.

The total value of all property in the state is 3579,978,797, which will yield the state in taxes $3,329,294.30.

OFFICIAL BATTING AVERAGES.

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 29.—President O'Brien, of the American Association of Baseball clubs, Saturday gave out the official batting averages for the last season.

Seventeen players, nine of whom played one hundred or more games in the [illegible] batted 300 or over.

Beckley, of the Kansas City team, who played one hundred games, batted 345. Julia Franklin, of Minneapolis, is fourth with 336. Franklin played 141 games, and he completed with hitting the ball better of the year in the American association.

Of the pitchers, Hamelton, of St. Paul club, is credited with the best [illegible] Hamelton, of Kansas City [illegible] Hamelton pitched in 40 games, [illegible] Of the catchers: Flood, of St. Paul, who played [illegible] games, and Hartman, of Toledo, the third baseman, Fennelly, of Minneapolis, Quinn, of Columbus, and Armbruster, of Toledo are the leading outfielders.

Josh Clarke, of Toledo, made the remarkable record of 54 stolen bases, and John Freeman, of Minneapolis, 36 home runs.

TO BE COURTMARTIALED.

Charges Growing Out of the Death of Lieutenant Sutton.

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 30.—An announcement is made here that Lieutenant Seward P. Roelker, of the U. S. marine corps, is to be courtmartialed on charges supposed to have grown out of the killing of Lieutenant James W. Sutton, Oct. 13, last. The details of the charges are being kept secret.

On the night in question Lieutenant Sutton, Lieutenant Roelker and Lieutenant R. B. Adams were returning to their quarters in the naval academy grounds from a ball. Suddenly Lieutenant Sutton drew a revolver from his pocket and pointed it at his head. Roelker and Adams seized him and the pistol was discharged, Roelker receiving a wound in the chest, which was not serious, and the bullet clipping Adams' finger. Then, according to the story, Sutton drew a second revolver and before his friends could interfere, shot himself dead.

FEUD ENDS FATALLY.

Battle Between the Millen and Jones Factions in Kentucky.

Knoxville, Tenn., Nov. 30.—A special to the Sentinel from Whitesburg, Ky., says:

In a feud battle between the Miller and Jones factions, on the left fork of Beaver creek, Saturday morning, John Miller, a reputed leader of the Miller faction, was killed.

Andy and Merrill Jones, of the Jones faction, were mortally wounded, and neither will survive the day.

Addy Jones has been with the Jones band since the days of Caleb Jones.

Off on a Long Cruise.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 30.—The battleship Vermont, one of the big ships which help form Sutton out of the Charlestown navy yard, preparatory to their long cruise to the Pacific, sailed Saturday for Newport, R. I. The New Jersey will sail Sunday afternoon and the Illinois and Missouri are to leave next Tuesday.

Farmer is Robbed of $1,500.

Cuthbert, Ga., Nov. 29.—Abb Gore, a wealthy farmer living near Cuthbert, was robbed of $1,500 Thursday. Mr. Gore put the money between the mattresses in his bed. Just when it was taken is not known.

VIEWS ON CURRENCY SITUATION.

Vanderlip Predicts a Normal Volume During December.

Chicago, Nov. 30.—Frank A. Vanderlip, vice president of the National City Bank of New York, who is in the city on his mother here, has predicted that the currency situation will get back to normal as soon as the December pay rolls are met.

"Eastern banks are undoubtedly hoarding money, that is they are running their reserves up to an abnormal point. There is an entirely adequate supply of currency at the present time. All that is needed to unlock the currency situation is more confidence and there is evidence of returning of that confidence.

"Some currency is being shipped to New York from interior points. In my opinion a few days more will end the premium on currency.

"There is a fair probability of currency legislation at the coming session of congress. Sentiment on the subject of currency legislation is still unerystallized. For my part I believe the ideal solution lies in the direction of a central bank that will have the power to issue and take on the fiscal duties of the treasury department. The effectiveness of cooperation through the clearing house during the present crisis has emphasized the important part the clearing house may be made to play in our financial system. It is possible the legislation now will give enlarged powers to the treasury to be used in conjunction with the clearing houses.

NEWSBOYS ENTERTAINED.

Paper Distributors Given Amusement Thanksgiving Day.

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 30.—It was a happy day for the ovaboys and carriers of a daily newspaper yesterday, for a special performance was given for their benefit at the Bostock Arena, thanks to the courtesy of General Manager Henry H. Tudor, representing Mr. Bostock, and to Circulation Manager P. A. Irwin, of the Constitution.

The boys met at the newspaper office in the morning and, in charge of Mr. Irwin, went direct to the park.

The performance started at 10 o'clock and lasted until after the hour of noon. Every act on the program was given and those applauded the longest and hardest were given again. Manager Tudor announces that next Monday a similar performance will be given for the chattering Arms.

The performance will be given at 9 o'clock and will be both full and complete.

Over eighty children are cared for by this institution, and in addition a free kindergarten is maintained.

Harvard House Burned.

Gloucester, Mass., Nov. 30.—A fire in the Harvard house here today resulted in one death, several injured and a damage estimated at $100,00. A man, believed to be George Chambers, of this city, was killed by jumping from a window on the second floor of the burning apartment house which was a three and a half story structure. The injured persons include several firemen who, besides leg fractures, were overcome by smoke and a Mrs. Johnson, who was so badly affected by the smoke, that at first her condition was regarded as very serious. The Harvard house was owned by the L. H. Smith Company.

527 Lepers at Molokati.

Honolulu, Nov. 1, via San Francisco, Nov. 29.—The board of health, on the petition of 527 lepers at the Molakatil settlement, have agreed to permit J. Lore Wallach to attempt the treatment of twelve lepers from the settlement. This is the result of the agitation which has been carried on by Wallach and his friends for several months, during which he has persistently claimed that he can cure leprosy, and has thereby aroused the hopes of the lepers themselves, who are almost all Hawaiians, and their relatives and friends out side the settlement.

Famous Musician Dies.

City of Mexico, Nov. 29.—Ricardo Castro, Mexico's foremost musician, died here Thursday of pneumonia. Senor Castro was but yet thirty years old, but had achieved international fame as a virtuoso and composer. At the time of his death he was director general of the National Conservatory of Music.

Dr. N. P Hoyle Dead

Augusta, Ga., Nov. 29.—Dr. N. P. Hoyle, for twenty years a physician here, and a Confederate veteran, died after an illness of one year. Heart failure was the immediate cause of his death. He was 64 years of age. He was born and reared in east Tennessee.

Black Hand Suspected.

Hutchinson, Kans., Nov. 29.—Algernon Pollett, a merchant and banker of Sylvia, has mysteriously disappeared and a Black Hand plot is suspected.

Cases at Portugal.

Washington, Nov. 29.—Unofficial, but authentic, advices were received here from Lisbon denying the reports of disturbances in Portugal and stating that complete calm prevails.

TO PROBE FINANCES

Congress Will Give Money Question First Consideration.

WILL START IN THE SENATE

Members of Both Houses Who Have Arrived, Confess that the Present Situation is a Difficult One Under Circumstances.

Washington, Nov. 30.—As the day for the opening of the sixtieth congress approaches it becomes more and more evident that the financial condition will receive firs consideration at the hands of that body.

The members of both houses who have already arrived in the city confess that the situation is a difficult one, and there has as yet been very little crystalization of thought on the subject.

A number of informal conferences have already been held and more must be held before anything like program can be announced.

Senator Aldrich, chairman of the senate committee on finance, which committee will have to deal with the question for the senate, is expected in the city Sunday to take up the question with some of the leaders, including Senator Allison and Speaker Cannon, who are now here.

There is a tendency toward having the proposed legislation originate in the senate instead of the house, because the senate is organized and the house is not, but it is too early to say definitely what way to look in that respect.

YOUNG PLUNGER.

He is Said To Have Made $1,000,000 in Wall Street.

New York, Nov. 30.—Jesse L. Livermore, the 26-year-old plunger, who was reputed credited with making $1,000,000 in Wall street, and who said he had retired, is said to be back in the street, looking for more. It is said that he has received $50,000 in cash and with the increase recently decided to make $1,000,000. "Keep your mouth shut and go home to your wife on time," was Livermore's advice to some seeking for a "system" in Wall street at the time he made his fortune.

Fireworks Shot to Sailors.

New York, Nov. 30.—As a farewell to the sailors who are to leave on the Connecticut upon their return to Newport News from which place the battleship fleet will sail for the Pacific Dec. 16, a ball was given on the largest dance hall at Coney Island Friday night. The rooms were elaborately decorated and 1,500 sailors and marines from the battleships now at New York navy yard were present.

Acquitted Former Treasurer.

Brunswick, Ind., Nov. 30.—John P. Walker, former city and county treasurer, who was charged with the embezzlement of over $50,000 of county funds, was late Friday acquitted at Rockport, Ind. Walker admitted the alleged shortage, but contended that he had no felonious intent and expected to realize sufficient on his lands to pay his debts. Walker is a cripple, his legs having been cut off above his knees in a railroad accident.

Despondent Woman Shoots Self.

Lambert, Miss., Nov. 30.—Despondent, it is supposed, because of continued ill health, Mrs. C. H. Willms, of this place, secured a revolver early Friday and shot herself in the head, dying almost instantly.

Baby Terribly Scalded.

Mineral Bluff, Ga., Nov. 30.—The infant baby of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Beavers was terribly scalded by turning over a kettle of boiling water. It is thought the child will recover.

BRIEF DISPATCHES.

J. H. MacFarlane has been elected vice president and general manager of the Mexico-American steamship company to succeed A. L. Reby, who died a few days ago in New Orleans.

A launch from the German cruiser Arcona collided with a native boat off the long low at Hyaboy, China. One German and two natives were lost in the waters of the sea.

There is a persistent rumor among the patrons of Oscar Hammerstein's Manhattan opera that Miss. Nordica, the prima donna, has cancelled her contract with that manager and will not again appear in New York this season.

Electrocution as a means of inflicting the death penalty will be first used in New Jersey on Dec. 6, when Emerio Giovani and Frederick Dolico will be put to death. This bill changing the mode of execution from hanging to electrocution was passed at the last session of the legislature.

The Duchess of Marlborough, who has been spending several weeks in Aiken, chiefly as the guest of her mother, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, was booked to sail for England Saturday on the Mauretania. It has been reported that the duchess expected to return to America until after Christmas.

Income Tax and Inheritance Tax.

...income tax laws are revised the question of an income tax and an inheritance tax should receive the careful attention of congress. In my judgment, both of these taxes should be part of our system of federal taxation. I speak deliberately about the income tax because the decision declaring it unconstitutional by the supreme court, while in addition it is a distinct tax to administer in its practical working, and great care would have to be exercised to see that it was not evaded by the very men whom it was most desirable to have taxed. Nevertheless a graduated income tax of the proper type would be a desirable feature of federal taxation, and it is to be hoped that one may be devised which the supreme court will declare constitutional.

The inheritance tax, however, is a far better method of taxation. The government has the absolute right to decide as to the terms upon which a man shall receive a bequest from another, and this point in the devolution of property is especially appropriate for the imposition of a tax. Laws imposing such taxes have repeatedly been placed upon the national statute books and as repeatedly declared constitutional by the courts, and these laws contained the progressive principle—that is, after a certain amount is reached the bequest or gift in life or death is increasingly burdened and the rate of taxation is increased in proportion to the remoteness of blood of the man receiving the bequest. These principles are recognized already in the leading civilized nations of the world.

Germany's Inheritance Tax.

The German law is especially interesting in so far because it makes the inheritance tax an imperial measure while allotting to the individual states of the empire a portion of the proceeds and permitting them to impose taxes in addition to those imposed by the imperial government. Small inheritances are exempt, but the tax is so sharply progressive that when the inheritance is still not very large, provided it is not an agricultural or a forest land, it is taxed at the rate of 25 per cent if it goes to distant relatives. There is no reason why in the United States the national government should not impose inheritance taxes in addition to those imposed by the states, and when we first had an inheritance tax about one-half of the states levied such taxes concurrently with the national government, making a combined maximum rate in some cases as high as 25 per cent.

To Tax Necessities Higher.

The tax should if possible be made to bear more heavily upon those residing without the country than within it. A heavy progressive tax upon a very large fortune is in no way such a tax upon thrift or industry as a like tax would be on a small fortune. No advantage comes either to the country as a whole or to the individuals benefiting thereby in permitting the transmission in their entirety of the enormous fortunes which would be affected by such a tax, and as an incident to its function of revenue raising such a tax would help to preserve a measurable equality of opportunity for the people of the generations growing to manhood.

We have not the slightest sympathy with that socialistic idea which would try to put laziness, thriftlessness and inefficiency on a par with industry, thrift and efficiency, which would strive to break up not merely private property, but, what is far more important, the home, the chief prop upon which our whole civilization stands.

Such a policy if ever adopted would mean the ruin of the entire country, but proposals for legislation which all this herein advocated are directly opposed to this class of socialistic theories.

Enforcement of the Law.

A few years ago there was loud complaint that the law could not be invoked against wealthy offenders. There is no such complaint now. The course of the department of justice during the last few years has been such as to make it evident that no man stands above the law, that no corporation is so wealthy that it cannot be held to account. Everything that can be done under the existing law and with the existing state of public opinion, which so profoundly influences both the courts and juries, has been done, but the laws themselves need strengthening. They should be made more definite, so that no honest man can be led unwittingly to break them and so that the real wrongdoer can be readily punished.

Moreover, there must be the public opinion back of the laws or the laws themselves will go for but little. The two great evils in the execution of our criminal laws today are sentimentality and technicality. For the latter the remedy must come from the hands of the legislatures, the courts and the lawyers. The other must depend for its cure upon the gradual growth of a sound public opinion which shall insist that regard for the law and the demands of reason shall control all other influences and emotions in the jury box. Both of these evils must be removed or public discontent with the criminal law will continue.

Injunctions.

Instances of abuse in the granting of injunctions in labor disputes continue to occur, and the resentment in the minds of those who feel that their rights are being invaded and their liberty of action and of speech unwarrantably restrained continues likewise to grow. Much of the attack on the use of the process of injunction is wholly without warrant, but I am constrained to express the belief that for some of it there is warrant. This question is becoming one of grave importance, and unless the courts will deal with it in effective manner it is certain ultimately to demand some form of legislative action. It would be most unfortunate for our social welfare if we should permit many honest and law abiding citizens to feel that they had just cause for regarding our courts with jealousy. I earnestly commend to the attention of the congress this matter, so that some way may be devised which will limit the abuse of injunctions and protect those rights which from time to time it is necessary shall invoke. Moreover, abatement is often expressed with the use of the process of injunction by the courts, not only in labor disputes, but where state laws are embodied. I refrain from discussion of this question as I am informed that it will soon receive the consideration of the supreme court.

The process of injunction is an essential adjunct of the court's doing its work well, and as preventive measures are always better than remedial the wise use of this process is from every standpoint commendable. But where it is recklessly or unnecessarily used the abuse should be censured, above all by the very men who are properly anxious to prevent any effort to abuse the courts of this necessary power. The court's decision must be final. The protest is only against the conduct of individual judges in needlessly anticipating such final decision or in the tyrannical use of what is essentially a temporary injunction to accomplish what is in fact a permanent decision.

The president urges the passage of a model employers' liability act for the District of Columbia and the territories to encourage corporations to treat injured wage-workers better. He emphatically indorses the eight hour day.

The president urges the states to fight the child and woman labor evil. He says:

The national government has as an ultimate resort for control of child labor the use of the interstate commerce clause to prevent the products of child labor from entering into interstate commerce. But before using this it ought certainly to enact model laws on the subject for the territories under its own immediate control.

Presidential Campaign Expenses.

Under our form of government voting is not merely a right, but a duty, and, moreover, a fundamental and necessary duty if a man is to be a good citizen. It is well to provide that corporations shall not contribute to presidential or national campaigns and, furthermore, to provide for the publication of both contributions and expenditures. There is, however, always danger in laws of this kind, which from their very nature are difficult of enforcement, the danger being lest they be obeyed only by the honest and disobeyed by the unscrupulous, so as to act only as a penalty upon honest men. Moreover, no such law would hamper an unscrupulous man of unlimited means from buying his own way into office. There is a very radical measure which would, I believe, work a substantial improvement in our system of conducting a campaign, although I am well aware that it will take some time for people as to familiarize themselves with such a proposition as to be willing to consider its adoption. The need for collecting large campaign funds would vanish if congress provided an appropriation for the proper and legitimate expenses of each of the great national parties, an appropriation ample enough to meet the necessity for thorough organization and machinery, which requires a large expenditure of money. Then the stipulation should be made that no party receiving campaign funds from the treasury should accept more than a fixed amount from any individual subscriber or donor, and the necessary publicity for receipts and expenditures could without difficulty be provided.

The Army.

The president recommends legislation to increase the number of officers in the army, especially in the medical corps. The rate of pay of officers should be greatly increased, he declares. There should be a relatively even greater increase in the rate of pay of enlisted men if we are to keep the army in shape to be effective in time of need. The president recommends severe examination of officers for promotion up to the rank of major. From that point promotion should be purely by selection. He speaks of the recent physical test of army officers with emphatic approbation and recommends a bill equalizing the pay of officers and men of the army, navy, marine corps and revenue cutter service.

The Navy.

Concerning the navy the president says:

In my judgment, we should this year provide for four battleships. But it is idle to build battleships unless, in addition to providing the men and the means for thorough training, we provide the auxiliaries for them—unless we provide docks, the coaling stations, the colliers and supply ships they need. We are extremely deficient in coaling stations and docks in the Pacific, and this deficiency should not longer be permitted to exist. Plenty of torpedo boats and destroyers should be built, both on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts; fortifications of the best type should be provided for all our greatest harbors.

Until our battle fleet is much larger than at present it should never be split into detachments so far apart that they could not be in case of emergency be speedily united. Our coast line is on the Pacific just as much as on the Atlantic. The battle fleet should now and then be moved to the Pacific, just as at other times it should be kept in the Atlantic. When the isthmian canal is built the transit of the battle fleet from one ocean to the other will be comparatively easy. Until it is built I earnestly hope that the battle fleet will be thus shifted between the two oceans every year or two. The battle fleet is about starting by the strait of Magellan to visit the Pacific coast. Sixteen battleships are going under the command of Rear Admiral Evans; eight armored cruisers and two other battleships will meet him in San Francisco, whither colliers and supply ships are also going. No fleet of such size has ever made such a voyage, and it will be of very great educational value to all engaged in it. The only way by which to teach officers and men how to handle the fleet so as to meet every possible strain and emergency in time of war is to have them practice under similar conditions in time of peace.

The president recommends the increased pay for both officers and enlisted men and advises promotion by selection above the grade of lieutenant commander.

Foreign Affairs.

In foreign affairs, the president says, this country's steady policy is to behave toward other nations as a strong and self respecting man should behave toward the other men with whom he is brought into contact. In other words, our aim is disinterestedly to help other nations where such help can be wisely given without the appearance of meddling with what does not concern us, to be careful to act as a good neighbor and at the same time in good natured fashion to make it evident that we do not intend to be imposed upon.

The president refers at length to The Hague peace conference. He believes it accomplished much good work.

Postal Savings Banks.

The president says on postal affairs: I commend to the favorable consideration of the congress a postal savings bank system as recommended by the postmaster general. Timid depositors have withdrawn their savings for the time being from national banks, trust companies and savings banks, individuals have hoarded their cash and the workingmen their earnings, all of which money has been withheld and kept in hiding or in the safe deposit box to the detriment of prosperity. Through the agency of the postal savings banks such money would be restored to the channels of trade, to the mutual benefit of capital and labor.

I further commend to the congress the consideration of the postmaster general's recommendation for an extension of the parcel post, especially on the rural routes. It would be a most desirable thing to put the fourth class postmasters in the classified service.

Other recommendations are:

Deepening of the inland waterways, especially of the Mississippi river system, to make them great national highways.

The repeal of the taxes on lumber products, especially the duty on wood pulp.

The amendment of the public land laws to make them more effective against land grabbers and more favorable to bona fide settlers.

Retention of the government title to public coal and other mineral lands.

Extension of the national forest reserves.

Citizenship for the people of Porto Rico.

Proper local self government for Alaska.

Encouragement of the merchant marine, particularly of an ocean mail line to South America.

Reclamation of the Potomac flats and their ivory for Chinese missions relating to America.

The Castle Comedy

By Thompson Buchanan

This is a rattling good love story of merry old England at the close of the Napoleonic wars.

In the scene pictured here the wilful young lady is telling her father she doesn't intend to marry. She means she does not intend to marry the nobleman her father has selected.

The reason, as the reader soon discovers, is that she has fallen in love with a French dancing master. Out of this complication grows the story.

Even if Thompson Buchanan were not a Louisville boy and had not written interesting stories for the Herald we would not hesitate to surrendering to his Castle Comedy the palm for absolute fascination.

The statement is made on good authority that the merchants of Texas are having new contracts printed for next year, requiring cotton farmers who will ask for credit to pledge themselves to sell the crop of 1908 as soon as picked. This is regarded as a movement on the part of the merchants to protect themselves against the holding proposition of next year.

NER ECONOMY.

She Wasn't Ashamed of It, but Didn't Like It Advertised.

"Of course," said the pretty schoolteacher who had just returned from her long vacation trip to Europe—"of course foreign labels slapped all over a suit case may give it an interesting look, and they certainly indicate that one has been abroad, but I don't feel very proud of the record pasted on my bag. The trouble with it is that I had to economize frightfully while I was in Europe in order to have the trip at all, and I had to stop at the very cheapest hotels I could find. It seemed as if those Europeans were determined to conduct a large advertising campaign through the medium of my suit case, for I couldn't escape their labels.

"I tried in every possible way to prevent the porters from getting hold of my luggage long enough to take it out from under my eyes, but they would grab it up, run away with it to some secret place and come back proudly displaying another huge label stuck to it. In every case I noticed, with additional pain, that the cheaper the hotel was the larger the label it used. It happens that I have a few really swell acquaintances in New York, who know Europe like a book, and they'll take it all in at a glance. Of course I'm not ashamed of having economized, yet I don't exactly care to flaunt my poverty. I only wish the foreign hotels would allow us a choice in the matter."—New York Press.

Beware of Frequent Colds.

A succession of colds or a protracted cold is almost certain to end in chronic catarrh, from which few persons ever wholly recover. Give every cold the attention it deserves and you may avoid this disagreeable disease. How can you cure a cold? Why not try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy? It is highly recommended. Mrs. M. White, of Butler, Tenn., says: "Several years ago I was bothered with my throat and lungs. Someone told me of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I began using it and it relieved me at once. Now my throat and lungs are sound and well." For sale by Upchurch Drug co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thorsby.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

The president in his message to congress says:

No nation has greater resources than ours, and I think it can be truthfully said that the citizens of no nation possess greater energy and industrial ability. In no nation are the fundamental business conditions sounder than in ours at this very moment, and it is foolish when such is the case for people to hoard money instead of keeping it in sound banks, for it is such hoarding that is the immediate occasion of money stringency. Moreover, as a rule, the business of our people is conducted with honesty and probity, and this applies alike to farms and factories, to railroads and banks, to all our legitimate commercial enterprises.

In any large body of men, however, there are certain to be some who are dishonest, and if the conditions are such that these men prosper or commit their misdeeds with impunity their example is a very evil thing for the community. Where these men are business men of great sagacity and of temperament both unscrupulous and reckless, and where the conditions are such that they act without supervision or control and at first without effective check from public opinion, they delude many innocent people into making investments or embarking in kinds of business that are really unsound. When the misdeeds of these successfully dishonest men are discovered, suffering comes not only upon them, but upon the innocent whom they have misled. It is a painful awakening, whenever it occurs, and naturally when it does occur those who suffer are apt to forget that the longer it was deferred the more painful it would be. In the effort to punish the guilty it is both wise and proper to endeavor so far as possible to minimize the distress of those who have been misled by the guilty. Yet it is not possible to refrain because of such distress from striving to put an end to the misdeeds that are the ultimate causes of the suffering and, as a means to this end, where possible to punish those responsible for them. There may be honest differences of opinion as to many governmental policies, but surely there can be no such differences as to the need of unflinching perseverance in the war against successful dishonesty.

Interstate Commerce.

No small part of the trouble that we have comes from carrying to an extreme the national virtue of self reliance, of independence in initiative and action. It is wise to conserve this virtue and to provide for its fullest exercise compatible with seeing that liberty does not become a liberty to wrong others. Unfortunately this is the kind of liberty that the lack of all effective regulation inevitably breeds. The founders of the constitution provided that the national government should have complete and sole control of interstate commerce. There was then practically no interstate business save such as was conducted by water, and this the national government at once proceeded to regulate in thoroughgoing and effective fashion. Conditions have now so wholly changed that the interstate commerce by water is insignificant compared with the amount that goes by land, and almost all big business concerns are now engaged in interstate commerce. As a result it can be but partially and imperfectly controlled or regulated by the action of any one of the several states, such action inevitably tending to be either too drastic or else too lax and in either case ineffective for purposes of justice. Only the national government can in thoroughgoing fashion exercise the needed control. This does not mean that there should be any extension of federal authority, for such authority already exists under the constitution in amplest and most far reaching form, but it does mean that there should be an extension of federal activity. This is not advocating centralization. It is merely looking facts in the face and realizing that centralization in business has already come and cannot be avoided or undone and that the public at large can only protect itself from certain evil effects of this business centralization by providing better methods for the exercise of control through the authority already centralized in the national government by the constitution itself. There must be no halt in the healthy constructive policy of action which this nation has adopted as against and has steadily pursued during the last six years, as shown both in the legislation of the congress and the administration of the law by the department of justice.

National License For Railroads.

The most vital need is in connection with the railroads. As to these, in my judgment, there should now be either a national incorporation act or a law licensing railway companies to engage in interstate commerce upon certain conditions. The law should be so framed as to give to the interstate commerce commission power to pass upon the future issue of securities, while ample means should be provided to enable the commission whenever in its judgment it is necessary to make a physical valuation of any railroad. As I stated in my message to the congress a year ago, railroads should be given power to enter into agreements subject to these agreements being made public in minute detail and to the consent of the interstate commerce commission being first obtained. Until the national government assumes proper control of interstate commerce in the exercise of the authority it already possesses it will be impossible either to give to or to get from the railroads full justice. The railroads and all other great corporations will do well to recognise that this control must come. The only question is as to what governmental body can most wisely exercise it. The courts will determine the limits within which the federal authority can exercise it, and there will still remain ample work within each state for the railway commission of that state, and the national interstate commerce commission will work in harmony with the several state commissions, each within its own province, to achieve the desired end.

The Antitrust Law.

Moreover, in my judgment, there should be additional legislation looking to the proper control of the great business concerns engaged in interstate business, this control to be exercised for their own benefit and prosperity no less than for the protection of investors and of the general public. As I have repeatedly said in messages to congress and elsewhere, experience has definitely shown not merely the unwisdom, but the futility, of endeavoring to put a stop to all business combinations. Modern industrial conditions are such that combination is not only necessary, but inevitable. It is so in the world of business just as it is so in the world of labor, and it is as idle to desire to put an end to all corporations, to all big combinations of capital, as to desire to put an end to combinations of labor. Corporation and labor union alike have come to stay. Each if properly managed is a source of good and not evil. Whenever in either there is evil it should be promptly held to account, but it should receive hearty encouragement so long as it is properly managed. It is profoundly immoral to put or keep on the statute books a law penalizing in the interest of public morality that really puts a premium upon public immorality by undertaking to forbid honest men from doing what must be done under modern business conditions so that the law itself provides that its own infraction must be the condition precedent upon business success. To aim at the accomplishment of too much usually means the accomplishment of too little and often the doing of positive damage.

Not Repeal, but Amendment.

The antitrust law should not be repealed, but it should be made both more efficient and more in harmony with actual conditions. It should be so amended as to forbid only the kind of combination which does harm to the general public, such amendment to be accompanied by or to be an incident of a grant of supervisory power to the government over these big concerns engaged in interstate business. This should be accompanied by provision for the compulsory publication of accounts and the subjection of books and papers to the inspection of the government officials. A beginning has already been made for such supervision by the establishment of the bureau of corporations.

The antitrust law should not prohibit combinations that do no injustice to the public, still less those the existence of which is on the whole of benefit to the public. But even if this feature of the law were abolished there would remain as an equally objectionable feature the difficulty and delay now incident to its enforcement. The government must now submit to irksome and repeated delay before obtaining a final decision of the courts upon proceedings instituted, and even a favorable decree may mean an empty victory. Moreover, to attempt to control these corporations by lawsuits means to impose upon both the department of justice and the courts an impossible burden. It is not feasible to carry on more than a limited number of such suits. Such a law to be really effective must of course be administered by an executive body and not merely by means of lawsuits. The design should be to prevent the abuses incident to the creation of unhealthy and improper combinations instead of waiting until they are in existence and then attempting to destroy them by civil or criminal proceedings.

Law Should Be Explicit.

A combination should not be tolerated if it abuse the power acquired by combination to the public detriment. No corporation or association of any kind should be permitted to engage in foreign or interstate commerce that is formed for the purpose of or whose operations create a monopoly or general control of the production, sale or distribution of any one or more of the prime necessities of life or articles of general use and necessity. Such combinations are against public policy. They violate the common law. The courts of the country are closed to those who are parties to them, and I believe the congress can close the channels of interstate commerce against them for its protection. The law should make its prohibitions and penalties as clear and definite as possible, leaving the least possible room for arbitrary action or allegation of such action on the part of the executive or of divergent interpretations by the courts.

Among the points to be aimed at should be the prohibition of unhealthy competition, such as by rendering service at an actual loss for the purpose of crushing out competition, the prevention of inflation of capital and the prohibition of a corporation's making exclusive trade with itself a condition of having any trade with itself. Reasonable agreements between or combinations of corporations should be permitted provided they are first submitted to and approved by some appropriate government body.

Congress' Power.

The congress has the power to charter corporations to engage in interstate and foreign commerce, and a general law can be enacted under the provisions of which existing corporations could take out federal charters and new federal corporations could be created. An essential provision of such a law should be a method of predetermining by some federal board or commission whether the applicant for a federal charter was an association or combination within the restrictions of the federal law. Provision should also be made for complete publicity in all matters affecting the public and complete protection to the investing public and the shareholders in the matter of issuing corporate securities. If an incorporation law is not deemed advisable, a license act for big interstate corporations might be enacted or a combination of the two might be tried. The supervision established might be analogous to that now exercised over national banks. At least the antitrust act should be supplemented by specific prohibitions of the methods which experience has shown have been of most service in enabling monopolistic combinations to crush out competition.

The real owners of a corporation should be compelled to do business in their own name. The right to hold stock in other corporations should hereafter be denied to interstate corporations, unless on approval by the proper government officials, and a prerequisite to such approval should be the listing with the government of all owners and stockholders, both by the corporation owning such stock and by the corporation in which such stock is owned.

Lessons of Recent Crisis.

To confer upon the national government in connection with the amendment I advocate in the antitrust law power of supervision over big business concerns engaged in interstate commerce would benefit them as it has benefited the national banks. In the recent business crisis it is noteworthy that the institutions which failed were institutions which were not under the supervision and control of the national government. Those which were under national control stood the test.

National control of the kind above advocated would be to the benefit of every well managed railway. From the standpoint of the public there is need for additional tracks, additional terminals and improvements in the actual handling of the railroads, and all this as rapidly as possible. Ample, safe and speedy transportation facilities are even more necessary than cheap transportation. Therefore there is need for the investment of money which will provide for all these things while at the same time securing as far as is possible better wages and shorter hours for their employees. Therefore, while there must be just and reasonable

CHAPTER VIII.

AGAIN the door rattled and shook under the weight of a hammering sword hilt. Within the room the man and girl struck still, stared blankly at each other. Surprise, dark anger, quick blushing shame and, last, white fear succeeded in her face. Her lips trembled, the hands clasped and unclasped nervously. Thrice she essayed to speak and could not. Only the eyes spoke plainly her fright and her appeal. Dubarre recovered first.

"Who is there?" he shouted, and the tone was not that of the humble dancing master in the least.

From without sounded a voice, hoarse with anger.

"Open! Open! 'Tis I! Open quickly!"

"Sir John!" It came at last, a low, faint gasp of horror from May Percy. Now she realized her false position—Dubarre's consideration of it. "What can I do?" she begged, low.

Silent, lightly as a cat, the Frenchman sprang to the door and ridiculously darned the key. Another second and he was back beside her.

"Sh!" he whispered. Then aloud: "And who may 'I' be? No matter. I'm have entree here." Again he whispered to the girl, "Try the window." As in a dream, she tiptoed to it, but the heavy shutter was closed and barred.

"Open! Open at once, I say!" Sir John's voice bore wild rage now. Every instant the door threatened to give way under his furious assault.

May Percy had stolen back to Dubarre. "The shutter—I can't manage it," she whispered faintly.

And now from beyond the door another voice broke in upon them. "'Tis Sir John Wilmerding and I, Captain Thorncliffe. We wish to speak with you, M. Dubarre."

"Captain Thorncliffe! Oh, I'm lost!" and, moaning thus piteously, May Percy seemed about to faint. Dubarre caught her almost roughly by the arm.

"Keep courage. You must hide," he muttered. His touch restored her. The Percy pluck began to assert itself. Her mouth set, and she looked at him understandingly. Aloud he cried:

"Pardon, monsieurs, pardon. I'm coming." and [illegible] the door. The [illegible] without delay.

"Well, hurry," [illegible] Wilmerding. "We don't want to [illegible] night."

May Percy rushed behind the bed. Dubarre darted after her. "Not here," he muttered fiercely, "the closet." Then he sprang to the mantel, knocked off the candlesticks and kicked over an andiron to make a big crash.

"Mon Dieu," he cried, loudly angry, "there goes the candle. That comes of being in a hurry." Next he was beside May Percy, opening the closet door and shooting all at once.

"Patience, monsieurs! In a moment—when I get a light."

Sir John Wilmerding was becoming nibber every second of delay.

"We'll make light enough when we get in," he roared.

Dubarre had stepped into the closet with May Percy. Now they came out, he shaking his head.

"Hopeless!"

"Can nothing be done?" whispered the girl in low tones of agony.

Again the man shook his head. "I can't kill both." Thus they stood gazing at each other, twin statues of despair.

From without the stern voice of Captain Thorncliffe punctuated their lethargy.

"Open, Dubarre, immediately or we'll force a way." And again a sword hilt began playing upon the door.

As at a deathbed one looks for the time, now Dubarre raised his eyes. His searching gaze, wandering from the girl, found the face of the big clock. Suddenly his own face brightened. Aloud, in laughing tones, almost triumphant, he cried:

"Mon Dieu! Don't, captain! I'm coming."

Seizing May Percy by the arm, he hustled her with desperate speed over to the big clock. The door of it came open easily. "Be quiet and trust me," he whispered. A moment more and the girl was locked in behind the wooden door. And the face of the clock above told nothing of it.

"I'm coming, messieurs; I'm coming." Dubarre was leaping across the room for the other door. And as he sprang by he jerked off his coat and threw it on the table. Quickly he turned the lock and threw open the door with a grand flourish.

"What has brought the humble dancing master this honor?" asked the obsequious, bowing Frenchman as Sir John Wilmerding and Captain Thorncliffe crossed the threshold.

"Are gentlemen to be kept waiting by a paid jumping jack?" demanded Sir John Wilmerding, striding to the center of the room.

For the fifth time the dancing master bowed to his waist.

"But see, monsieur," he protested, "I did not stop even to finish dressing."

Captain Thorncliffe turned impatiently to his companion.

"Come, Jack. We are not here to [illegible] words. State what you want."

The Frenchman looked from one to the other. "Messieurs, what has happened? You are wearing swords. Do you expect attack? What can be the matter?" In surprise and sudden anxiety he piled questions one upon another.

"Matter enough!" roared Wilmerding. "We are searching for Mistress Percy."

Dubarre was the picture of horrified astonishment. "Mon Dieu!" he cried. "Has some beast stolen her?" He rushed to the table and began slipping on his coat. "For her I, too, could wear a sword." He ran back and, seizing Sir John by the arm, began pulling him toward the door, all the while crying: "But come, come, monsieur! We are losing time! Your betrothed may be"—

Sir John shook him off with a fierce oath, so that the smaller Frenchman staggered back several paces.

"Scoundrel, she's here!"

Mistress Percy's dancing master straightened himself. A look of wonder crept into his face.

"'Tis a strange jest, monsieur." The words were spoken very slowly.

"If it only were a jest!" roared Wilmerding. "I tell you, I saw her come."

Straightway Dubarre was swept into equal rage. With his nostrils twitching, he stepped close to Wilmerding and thrust his own blazing eyes within a foot of the angry lover's. "If you say that, Englishman, like many another spy, you lie!"

Sir John sprang back and half drew his sword. Captain Thorncliffe leaped [illegible] time to catch his arm.

"Steady, Jack, steady," advised the captain soothingly. "I knew there must be some mistake."

The Frenchman's anger had changed to cold contempt now.

"And I assure monsieur will rue when Mistress Percy hears of it," he sneered.

Sir John Wilmerding shook off the restraining arm bitterly.

"Loose me, Hal. I tell you I saw her come not twenty minutes ago. I watched the door and saw for purpose I might have witness when I killed the new born lover."

He turned again fiercely on the sneering Frenchman.

"Quiet, Jack! Be calm!" soothed Captain Thorncliffe sternly.

Again the Frenchman bowed humbly.

"The poor dancing master should always strive to please monsieur. And of a truth, if I'm to die for it, it pains me deeply that, dying, I cannot at the last please Sir John by producing the lady." His manner expressed only great sorrow that his failure to do so should give the lover pain.

Sir John shot black looks all about the room.

"If she's here we'll find her," he declared fiercely.

Eagerly Dubarre seized the opportunity for vindication.

"Yes, yes. Let us search." As he spoke he rushed to the bed and tore back the curtains. Sir John winced visibly at that. It did not escape the Frenchman. Still holding the cloth, he turned, blandly questioning.

"Pray, where did the titled lover expect to find his mistress? Was she discussing theology with the humble dancing master?" Then, without waiting for reply, he jerked down the curtains, threw them off the bed and began to shake them in violent style.

"Is the fellow mad? What are you doing?" demanded Captain Thorncliffe.

Dubarre looked up apologetically. "One never can tell, monsieur. I thought perhaps a girl, a half girl or possibly a girl and a half might be hidden in the curtains."

Thorncliffe exclaimed sternly:

"Dubarre, enough of this trifling."

The dancing master was all eagerness to please. "As monsieur le commande wishes," he said suavely, "but monsieur knows all manner of queer things may happen when a titled lover traces his affianced bride to the room of an abject dancing master." Then turning from the captain to Sir John he made a gesture toward the mattress. "Will monsieur thrust his sword in the bed?" The lover winced again. "I'm sure," added Dubarre, with great earnestness, "she must scream if it touches her."

"Cease such unseeming jesting!" shouted the badgered one.

The Frenchman became mildly aggrieved. "I did not jest, monsieur. 'Twas your own suggestion," he said. "I wished but to make sure. Will monsieur lend me the sword?"

"No," answered Wilmerding shortly.

"Enough!" said Captain Thorncliffe.

Dubarre drew a small knife from his belt. "Then by myself I'll make sure," he declared and, springing suddenly on the bed, thrust the knife repeatedly into the mattress.

"Is it enough?" he asked, after a dozen thrusts, looking up.

"Come down, Dubarre," ordered Thorncliffe, laughing in spite of himself.

The Frenchman climbed down. Then, looking at his work, ruefully pulled the bed regretfully. "Your look, it was cruel treatment after the many times you have comforted me, but," shaking his head sadly, "when ladies of fashion seek by night the rooms of renegade dancing masters, then all things must be changed about."

Sir John had moved over beside the casement. "The window—she might have got out by this."

Then he and Captain Thorncliffe struggled with the bar. It took several minutes of tussling before the heavy shutter moved back. Dubarre laughed and thanked them for doing something that he had been unable to do for himself.

Now the searchers stood perplexed. The simple room seemed to afford no other hiding place. Suddenly Wilmerding caught sight of the closet door. He trembled as nothing since his entrance had made him tremble. Here was the quarry run to earth at last.

"The closet!" he exclaimed and rushed toward it, crying: "Watch the French scoundrel, Hal. Don't let him escape."

Dubarre's lips were smiling. About the eyes he had grown ten years. Then Wilmerding stumbled against the clock. The Frenchman's smile seemed frozen on his face.

"Hang the clock!" cried the lover and reached for the closet door.

"Poor clock!" murmured the dancing master, and as Wilmerding paused before the door he added, "For a man who has sought so earnestly, Sir John Wilmerding displays rare diffidence at meeting his betrothed."

Sir John whirled that way and drew his sword. "Be still, Frenchman."

The other only continued in the same reflective tone. "If a titled lover cannot keep his betrothed from the room of a poor dancing master before marriage, how difficult afterward it should be to hold the wife from gentlemen of fashion and soldiers."

"The closet!" he cried and rushed toward it.

[illegible] was [illegible] the closet door.

"Hal," he said at last, "I'm not myself. I can't [illegible] her. Let us search the Frenchman. You open the door. And as for you"—raising his sword above Dubarre—"If—"

With a quick jerk Captain Thorncliffe had pulled open the closet door. "Here she is!" he cried in joyful tones.

Wilmerding's sword fell to the floor with a crash. The lover shook a moment for very joy.

"Thank God!" he said [illegible] last.

The Frenchman looked at both with a sneer. "Are you quite sure, messieurs?" he asked.

"I was before I came!" declared Thorncliffe heartily.

Dubarre turned now on Wilmerding. "'Twas a brave deed, monsieur, for the titled lover with sword to lift to insult the poor, unarmed dancing master."

"No harm was done," blurted Sir John, the more brutally to cover his confusion.

The Frenchman merely looked at him. "Doubtless Mistress Percy will be glad to hear that she was proved innocent," he said.

Captain Thorncliffe had to bite his lips at that. "Don't push Jack so hard, Dubarre," he urged.

The dancing master continued to Sir John: "But is monsieur sure—quite sure—that she is innocent? One never can tell of women. Is there not some other place to look? Possibly she may have hidden behind the face of the clock. It stopped this morning. A touch up may do it good."

Captain Thorncliffe was called upon to interfere. "Enough, enough, Dubarre!" he begged. "Don't you see he's sorry?"

"Yes," said Wilmerding angrily, "I'm sorry." He thrust his sword in its scabbard and stalked toward the door.

The Frenchman looked after the departing lover. "One would think he was sorry he had not found her," said the vindicated man sarcastically.

Captain Thorncliffe held out his hand. "I know you will say nothing of this, Dubarre. I am grieved that jealousy should have led Jack to such folly. You have acted splendidly throughout."

Dubarre smiled as they shook hands. "You should know," he said, then added: "'Twas sad. Pierre came in wearing a long cloak 'gainst the rain, but went away again without it. That fooled him. Good night, monsieur."

Specialist in Throat and Lung Troubles Endorses Vinol.

He writes: "In cases where the curative influence of cod liver oil is needed, I prescribe Vinol, which I find to be far more palatable and efficient than other cod liver preparations. I am convinced from my own experience and from a knowledge of the nature of Vinol, that it is a worthy cod liver preparation to which a physician may have every confidence." C. L. Demme M. D., Goshen, Ind.

Such testimony furnishes further evidence to the people of Clanton that our delicious cod liver preparation, Vinol, does all we claim for it.

As a body builder and strength creator for old people, delicate children, weak run-down persons, after sickness, and for chronic coughs, colds, bronchitis and all throat and lung troubles, Vinol is unexcelled. This is because Vinol is made by a scientific, extractive and concentrating process from fresh cods' livers, combining with peptonate of iron all the medicinal, healing, body-building elements of cod liver oil, but no oil.

We ask the people of Clanton to try Vinol on our offer to return their money if it fails to give satisfaction. Upchurch Drug Co., Clanton, Ala.

Best Cough Medicine for Children.

The season for coughs and colds is now at hand and too much care cannot be used to protect the children. A child is much more likely to contract diphtheria or scarlet fever when he has a cold. The quickest and surest cure for colds, the best preventive of pneumonia, is Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Many mothers, on account of this remedy, will not be without it. Mrs. F. F. Sanches of Ripley, W. Va., says: "I have never used anything other than Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for my children and it has always given good satisfaction." This remedy contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given as confidently to a child as to an adult. For sale by Upchurch Drug co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thorsby.

Girls' Names.

Eighteenth century "girls" were christened Sophia and Caroline, in the early nineteenth Emma and Jane, a little later Laura and Clara. Then came a crop of Dorothys and Marjories, who are now all calling their own babies (in a reaction against the "quaint") Elizabeth. The names of men suffer no such emphatic fashions, and yet it is a pleasure to note that there are certainly no more young men called Alf and Gus, as were the young men who walked with the crinoline in the days of Leech. Good is the sequel of John through all changes.—London Chronicle.

A Trick With Numbers.

Choose any four consecutive numbers, as 50, 51, 52 and 53. Multiply them together, and the product may be divided by 24. This will be found to hold true for any four consecutive numbers we may choose unless one of the numbers is 24 or a multiple of 24, such as 48, 72, 96, etc. In the same way any five consecutive numbers multiplied together may be divided by 120 unless one of the numbers is 120 or a multiple of 120.—St. Louis Republic.

The Prodigal Son.

Father, I have come home to you! Haven't you cost already without adding the "fatted calf"?—Life.

A Real Wonderland.

South Dakota with its rich silver mines, boundless farms, wide ranges and strange natural formations, is a veritable wonderland. At Mound city, in the home of Mrs. B. . Clapp a wonderful case of healing has lately occured. Her son received near death with lung and throat trouble. "Exhausting coughing spells occured every five minutes," writes Mrs. Clapp, "when I began giving Dr. King's New Discovery, the great medicine, that saved his life and completely cured him." Guaranteed for coughs and colds, throat and lung troubles, by Upchurch Drug Co. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

Roots For Farm Animals.

Roots are stored in a pit in the field a high, dry place should be chosen. If the ground is clayey the roots should be placed on top of the ground. If it is gravelly and drainage is good a shallow pit about five feet wide and any necessary length may be shoveled out. The roots should be carefully stored in a gable shaped pile about six feet wide and as long as convenient. A thin layer of straw should first be laid upon the pile and this covered with six to eight inches of earth. Another and thicker layer of straw and a final layer of earth will complete the work. Ventilators should be placed at intervals of ten or fifteen feet, which should be closed when freezing has ceased. The pit should not be opened on warm days in winter. Watch for drainage should be cut around the pit. Roots stored in this way do not keep as well as when stored in a good cellar; therefore they should be fed out as early as possible.—New York Cornell Experiment Station.

Celery Stored in Cellars.

Where celery is stored in cellars the temperature should be kept low and plenty of ventilation maintained. The growth and changeness of the ordinary cellar have a tendency to cause the celery to decay, but these conditions can frequently be overcome. Celery will readily absorb any odor that may be present in the atmosphere of the storage place, and care should be taken to provide sanitary conditions. The roots should have most of their moisture removed, and a bed of moist sand in which to set them should be provided.

ALFALFA SEED.

[illegible] Advice From Experienced Growers.

[illegible] Colvert said: I can supply readers the members of your club and alfalfa growers in general no better service in one brief communication than to urge upon them with emphasis the utmost caution and painstaking in securing and sowing none but the highest quality of seed. This quality means not only good germination but free [illegible] the adulterations and impurities likely to be found present, most frequently from carelessness or deliberate [illegible] from foreign and worthless [illegible] from both. Alfalfa seed is extremely sensitive to heat, and drying or [illegible] of it is well nigh ruinous with [illegible] and exposure of other seeds which [illegible] a fifth, a third or a half [illegible] with [illegible] the alfalfa, chaffing [illegible] with [illegible] and [illegible] of thought and [illegible].

Not Germinable.

Among samples of alfalfa sent otherwise for sale [illegible] the name of the Kansas experiment station found over [illegible] that 70 per cent of [illegible] [illegible] kinds of foreign seeds [illegible] to 45 per cent, trash and dirt 4 per cent, and 25.8 per cent of [illegible] was really alfalfa seed was not germinable.

A Year is Lost.

Of course, as a matter of fact, where bad seed is sown the actual result is a weak, poor stand of alfalfa and a dense growth of weeds. The land has to be plowed up and reseeded, the use of the land for a year is lost, and it has become foul with weeds, many of which will be newly introduced and noxious in character.

These findings pointedly suggest that it is safe to [illegible] some of our thoroughly reputable dealer or grower whose name and guarantee stand for something. Get samples early and test them. Learn positively that it is alfalfa seed and not something else and that it will grow. If more than 10 per cent fails to grow don't buy it, for something is wrong. Choice seed, the only kind worth sowing, always commands a good price and is worth it.—Kansas Farmer.

FINE CUCUMBERS.

Full Preparation of Land Described by a Gardener.

I have been farming and gardening all my life, writes A. M. Dunmore of Sangamon county, Ill., in American Agriculturist. As soon as one crop is out of the way I begin to prepare for another. The ground for cucumbers is prepared in the fall. I begin by throwing out and making big holes, then filling these with barnyard manure.

I throw back on the top the earth taken out of the holes. About May 1 the following year I sow my cucumber seeds in these prepared places. I use different kinds of the large varieties, several of which are shown in the accompanying illustration. To keep off cucumber beetles I use a small frame covered with thin cloth. This of course can only be utilized while the plants are small.

Cement Blocks For Poultry Houses.

My experience with cement blocks has proved to my mind that they are unfit for use in poultry houses. The poultrymen wish to avoid as far as possible all dampness, and what few cement blocks I have used on my buildings have been more or less porous. They would absorb moisture, and in wet weather to a degree which would allow it to go through the block, even though the blocks had considerable hollow space for circulation. It is possible that if the blocks were made with a very large proportion of cement and a little sand this might to a certain degree be overcome. But I would under no circumstances use them for poultry houses or advise others to do so.—S. S. in Rural New Yorker.

Boll Weevil Problems.

All students of the problem of boll weevil control have agreed that in the prevention of successful hibernation lies the most effectual means of reducing the numbers of the weevil and preventing injury the next season. Two methods are advocated—first, the destruction of the stalks in the fall as early as possible, and, second, rotation of the cotton crop, planting on land not in cotton the previous year and as far from such land as is possible.—W. Dwight Sanderson.

Dodder Not Poisonous to Stock.

Dodder is not poisonous to stock. Hay carrying dense bunches of it is usually pulled aside by stock, says an authority on this subject.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Lesson X—Fourth Quarter, For Dec. 8, 1907.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Ruth i, 14-22—Memory Verses, 16, 17—Golden Text, Ruth i, 16—Commentary Prepared by Rev. B. M. Shapiro.

(Copyright, 1907, by American Press Association.)

A beautiful story of the days of the judges. When there was no monarch to whom spiritual God did right in his own eyes" (Judg. xvii, 6; xxi, 25). Though all God had His Church and Chosen and Shepherd, Prophets and others and were quietly and surely working out His eternal purpose. The last word in the book, David, tells us one reason why the book was written. The first and last titles of Christ in the New Testament associate Him with David (Matt. i, 1; Rev. xxii, 16), the names which show that He was of the lineage and whose throne is yet to give worldwide blessing. The closing verses of the book inform us as to the ancestry for several generations and that Ruth of the many was his great-grandmother and that the first head Boaz and the son of Rahab of Jericho, both of these women having honorable mention in Matt. i, in which chapter David is the only man called a king—although the stories of many kings are given. The story of this book is a foreshadowing of the final when the many gleaners shall gather with the field to that blessing when God shall fully bless and the meek shall inherit the earth (Ps. xxxvii, 9, 11; Matt. v, 5). Our Kinsman Redeemer, the true mighty lord of wealth, shall redeem the inheritance and deliver the whole creation from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God (Rom. viii, 21-23). "The kingdom shall be the Lord's" (Obad. 21).

Some one has written the book as follows: Chapter i, Ruth decides; chapter ii, Ruth gleaning; chapter iii, Ruth resting; chapter iv, Ruth rewarded. The lesson, suggested by this division, but we must look a little at the context.

It finds us in Bethlehem and Naomi made a mistake in going to Moab, but God [illegible] it to His use all things—to work out His purpose. "Surely the wrath of man shall praise Thee; the remainder of wrath shalt Thou restrain" (Ps. lxxvi, 10). The death of her husband and two sons in the land of Moab leads to Naomi like a chastening, for she says, "I went out full, and the Lord hath brought me home again empty" (verse 21). The going out was bitter, the bringing home was the Lord's. She said, "The hand of the Lord is gone out against me . . . the Lord hath testified against me, the Almighty hath afflicted me" (verses 13, 20, 21). Yet doubtless she would afterward add, "Before I was afflicted I went astray, but now have I kept Thy word" (Ps. cxix, 67). The fullness of blessing which came to her through Ruth could not have been known unless she had been emptied. Broken and emptied vessels are the kind the Lord uses. The name "Almighty" is suggestive of this, a name first used in Gen. xvii, 1, and more times in the book of Job than in all the rest of the Bible. Job, although a servant of God, thought a great deal of himself (Job xxix), but after he had his eyes opened to see and abhor himself he was blessed as never before (chapter xlii).

That Naomi should urge her sons' wives to return to their idolatrous homes and people seems strange when she knew the God of Israel to be the only true God, but she was not specially joyful in the Lord about that time and was so lonely herself that she seemed to think only of the temporal welfare of her daughters-in-law. We do not say but that she should at all costs have sought to win the Moabites to the true God, but Christians will never win people out of the world by going down into it and being conformed to it. Think how the people of Sodom despised Lot when he pleaded with them. They knew him too well.

Naomi's testimony, on the whole, must have been for God rather than against Him, else Ruth would never have acted or spoken as she did. May her immortal words be ours as we turn to Him who loved us and gave Himself for us (verses 16, 17), and may we indeed be as devoted to Him as she was to Naomi. There is another gentile who always comes before me when I think of Ruth; I mean Ittai, the Gittite, who said to David, "As the Lord liveth and as my lord the king liveth, surely in what place my lord the king shall be, whether in death or life, even there also will thy servant be" (II Sam. xv, 21). These gentiles make us think of two others in the gospel story. Likewise a man and a woman who gratefully responded our Lord by their great faith.

The words, "thoroughly minded" (verse 18) make us think of Acts vii, 55; xi, 23; I Cor. xv, 58, and work in us a great desire to say "Jesus only" and, with patience looking unto Him.

"So they two went" (verse 19) points us to another instance of great devotion when Elisha refused to leave Elijah because he wanted a double portion of his spirit (II Kings ii, 1-15), and we read, "So they came; they two went on; they two stood; they two went over; they still went on and talked." When we desire to be filled with the Spirit as much as Elisha did that day and see Jesus as intently as he saw Elijah, something will surely come of it to the glory of God.

Sailing on the Trains in Spain.

An even eighth miles makes an hour, a higher rate of speed than twenty-five miles per hour travel is done and because, though fairly numerous, able to make them one must arrange his journey beforehand. The speed of the express trains. So is what the ordinary trains. So is what the ordinary who are business, and never are always on hand were indispensable this on these long journeys. Spanish etiquette demands that the traveler before partaking of his food must politely offer it to those who share his compartment with him. It only costs a centimo (equivalent to one-fifth of a cent) to be politely supplied or declined. In all country it is difficult to travel and to secure information, as but few of the English is spoken even by the [illegible]—Travel Magazine.

Brooks and Homer Hood, are made defendants, and prayed among other things that certain rates in said bill of complaint designated and referred to be suspended and suppressed, and for an injunction pendente lite against the defendants thereto, especially the said Asa W. Collins, as Attorney General of the State of Alabama, and against the Solicitors of Circuits in the counties through which Complainant's road, or part thereof, is operated, and against the successor and successors in office of said clerks and against all other persons acting for or in their stead, or on their behalf, or by their procurement, or that of either of them, as clerk or clerks aforesaid, and against all other shippers or consignors of freight, and all other passengers and all other persons similarly situated, and of the same classes, respectively, or otherwise as the case may be.

Upon motion of Complainant, the 24 day of December, 1907, at twelve o'clock M., is fixed for the hearing of said motion at the court room in Montgomery, of this, the United States Circuit Court for the Middle District of Alabama.

Upon further motion of Complainant, and upon its being made to appear to the court that irreparable injury will be caused Complainant before the hearing of said motion for a suppression and suspension of said rates, and for said writ of injunction, unless the said rates are forthwith suspended, and said injunction granted; It is now ordered that the several rates fixed by the eight acts of the Legislature of Alabama, approved November 5th, 1907, each entitled alike, except as to the number of the group mentioned therein, and which title except as to such number, for which a blank is left, reads as follows: "An Act to fix and establish the maximum rate to be charged by railroads now operating, or which may hereafter be operated as common carriers, in whole or in part in the State of Alabama, for the transportation of passengers within the State, or certain stations, or communities to be known as Group No. —, and for this purpose to classify said railroads," be and the same are hereby suspended and suspended until said motion for suppression and suspension of rates, pendente lite and for the injunction of the kind can be heard and determined and until the further order of this court.

It is further ordered that the several new demurrable hereinabove named be enjoined and restrained, as prayed for in said bill of complaint until complainant's said motion for an injunction pendente lite against them can be heard and determined.

This order shall remain in force until the determination of complainant's motion for a suppression and suspension of the rates hereinabove mentioned, and of complainant's motion for an injunction pendente lite.

Let a copy of this order be served upon each of the above respectively named defendants, and a copy thereof be published in a newspaper published in each county through which any portion of Complainant's road is operated, provided, however, that the failure to make such publication in any county or counties, because no newspaper is therein published, or because such newspaper refuses upon reasonable terms, to publish the same, or otherwise, shall not, in any manner, affect the validity or effect of this restraining order.

This 27th day of November, 1907.

THOS. G. JONES, Judge U. S. Court.

Body Mixed Up.

Abraham Brown, of Winterton, N. Y., had a very remarkable experience; he says: "Doctors have got badly mixed up over me; one said heart disease; two called it kidney trouble; the fourth blood poison; and the fifth stomach and liver trouble; but none of them helped me; so my wife advised trying Electric Bitters, which are restoring me to perfect health. One bottle did a more good than the five doctors prescribed." Guaranteed for blood poison, weakness and all stomach, liver and kidney complaints, by Upchurch Drug Co. 50c.

A DESERT SANDSTORM.

Experience of a Woman Traveler While Crossing Sahara.

When it comes to describing a sandstorm in the desert of Sahara it is doubtful by Miss Fisher Thomson. "Five years being such a space of time nevertheless as a desert wanderer, and I shall never forget my experience of one. One dangerous day suddenly called our attention to a darkening horizon line. "Sea," he said, wanderers cannot. No one will ride in such." We had barely time to dismount and make the camels kneel in a circle on the sand before the storm was upon us. Each man threw his haiks over the packs of his saddle and crouched within the shelter it afforded and that formed by the animal's body behind him, while I nestled in the hollow formed by my camel's neck and shoulder, drawing the folds of the blanket like small tightly over me. The wise beast, knowing what was coming, turned her long neck right round and laid her head on my knees, making the protection of my cloak for her eyes against the sand, which, driven by the fury of the wind, struck the face like powdered glass.

"But I looked out upon the scene as long as I could, watching what appeared to be a mass of brown gauze veils streaming up across the sky, darkening the sunlight and gradually blotting out everything from our sight. An icy wind preceded the cloud, increasing in intensity every minute until the sound of its roaring made one's own voice inaudible, while the darkness became that of densest night. And so we sat silent in the gales and the blackness until the hurricane abated. Then, looking out again, I saw the brownish mass of cloud flying before the wind away toward the Nile, some forty miles distant, and the cloudless blue of a March sky in Egypt once more overspread above us.

"But the legs of our beasts were all covered with the sand that had fallen, and notwithstanding my sheltered position the sand was lying on my dress and hat and was thick upon us. For some time we watched the brown cloud losing itself in the immensity of the desert, where the whitening bones of animals tell with sad frequency of the overwhelming fury of these sudden tempests; then we mounted and rode away."—Chicago News.

THE DOLLAR.

Its Evolution From the Ox Time Shell or Bullion.

The dollar took many regarding. Ever since it formerly ring from New York south-eastward to the Gulf of Mexico, Cattle, among countless folk, at one time constituted the dollar, while primitive man generally made use of any article sufficiently abundant for the standard payment of all merchandise.

Thus, in ancient Greece, a large bronze tripod had the value of a dozen oxen. A good hardworking woman, on the other hand, was given in exchange for only four such beasts.

When metal took the place of money the dollar clung to its traditions, and coins were still called after live stock. Thus "pecunia," applied to metal money, derived its origin from "pecus" (cattle). From the custom of counting heads of cattle came the present designation of a sum in cash—capital or "capita" (heads). In Sanskrit roupa (herd, flock) made roupya or the Indian rupee, while ingots of electrum or admixture of gold and silver when first in use as money bore the impress of an ox or cow.

Not clumsy, but too fragile, were the shells in use as money by the negroes of Africa and throughout ancient Asia, where the natives, taken by its beauty, gave the shell a money value.—R. Holt-Lomax in Harper's Weekly.

Whenever you feel that your stomach has gone a little wrong, or when you feel that it is not in good order as is evidenced by mean headaches, nervousness, bad breath, belching, take something at times and especially after your meals and relief is afforded. There is nothing better offered the public today for stomach troubles, dyspepsia, indigestion, etc., than KODOL. This is a scientific preparation of natural digestants combined with vegetable acids and it contains the same juices found in every healthy stomach. KODOL is guaranteed to give relief. Human Life Seems Centered in S... All Else Is Secondary.

The immense success which has attended L. T. Cooper during the past year with his new proposition has exceeded anything of the kind ever before witnessed in most of the leading cities where the young man has introduced the medicine. Cooper has a novel theory. He believes that the by-most stomach is directly responsible for most disease. To quote his own words from an interview upon his arrival in an eastern city: "The average man or woman cannot be sick if the stomach is working properly. To be sure, there are diseases of a virulent nature, such as cancer, tuberculosis, diabetes, etc., which are organic, and are not traceable to the stomach, but even fevers can, in nine cases out of ten, be traced to something taken into the stomach. All of this half-sick, nervous exhaustion that is now so common, is caused by the stomachic conditions, and it is because my remedy will and does regulate the stomach that I am meeting with such success.

BLIND MAN'S BUFF.

This Common Game Is of Great Antiquity and French Origin.

Blind man's buff is of French origin and of very great antiquity, having been introduced into England in the train of the Norman conquerors. Its French name, "Colin Maillard," was that of a brave warrior, the memory of whose exploits still lives in the chronicles of the middle ages.

In the year 900 Liege, reckoned among its valiant chiefs one Jean Colin. He acquired the name Maillard from his chosen weapon being a mallet, wherewith in battle he smote literally to crush his opponents.

In one of the feuds which were of perpetual recurrence in those times he encountered the Count de Tournine in a pitched battle, and, so runs the story, in the first onset Colin Maillard lost both his eyes.

He ordered his esquire to take him in the thickest of the fight, and, furiously brandishing his mallet, did quite terrible execution there, finally losing himself for him.

When Robert of France heard of these feats of arms he lavished favor and honors upon Colin, and so great was the fame of the exploit that it was commemorated in the pantomimic representation that formed part of the rude dramatic performance of the age. By degrees the children learned to act it for themselves, and it took the form of a familiar sport.

The blindfolded persons, as, with bandaged eyes and extended hands, he gropes for a victim to pounce upon, in some degree repeats the action of Colin Maillard, the tradition of which is also traceable in the name "blind man's buff."—London M. A. P.

A Boon to Elderly People

Most elderly people have some kidney or bladder disorder that is both painful and dangerous. He Knew the Step.

A young constable arrived in a certain borough in Scotland and in the course of duty found it essential to apprehend a very old offender. Arrived at the police station, he ushered him into the cells with the comment, "Mind the step."

"Gae awa', man," said the prisoner, with contempt. "I kent the step afore ye was born."—Dundee Advertiser.

CHILDREN'S

favorite tonic is White's Cream Vermifuge, the cure for worms and all children's diseases. It not only kills the worms, but removes the mucus and slime in which they build their nests. Its action on the child is mild and leaves him in a healthy condition. Joe Daniel, Sarmac, Tenn., says that he gave one of his children White's Cream Vermifuge when the doctor thought it had colic, and from the first dose the child passed 78 worms. There is a number of people who are under an erroneous impression. They think that they never control enough money to start a bank account. In this they are mistaken. We solicit small accounts as well as large. And we handle the business of both with our best care. We believe that you ought to have a bank account, and we offer you our services.

THE CLANTON BANK

CLANTON, ALA.

Many people seem to think that unless they can open a Savings Account with not less than $50.00 or $100.00, it is not worth the while to begin. This is not a correct position to take. If a person cannot open an account with more than $1.00, and really desires to get some money ahead, then he should begin with even $1.00. The first dollar saved and put in bank, is the initial step on the way to prosperity. "Great oaks from little acorns grow." As a rule, the person who "Puts off" the opening of a Savings Account until he has a large amount to deposit, is not likely to ever have a bank account. We solicit your account.

Editor Banner—Please allow me a small space in your paper to say a few words, as I have not seen anything from this place in a long time. I am glad to say that the health of this community is good at present. Rev. Joe Gibson preached at this place Sunday last and preached a good sermon to a large crowd; he preached his farewell sermon and is now going to enter school. We had a good time Thanksgiving day, singing at Bro. F. A. Gibson's and thanking the Lord for the blessings given us this year. Bro. F. A. Gibson and wife and also Bro Joe Gibson and wife visited Mr. J. M. Johnson's family Saturday night and reported a nice time. We are having some fine weather now. Best wishes to the Banner and its readers.

SUICIDE OF ACTRESS

While the Audience Waited Clara Bloodgood Took Her Life.

BODY WAS FOUND ON BED

Noted Actress Sends Bullet Into Her Head at the Hotel Stafford in Baltimore—Nervous Breakdown Cause of Rash Act.

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 6.—Mrs. Clara Bloodgood, the actress, committed suicide by shooting in her room at the Hotel Stafford here on Thursday evening.

Mrs. Bloodgood's body was found lying on the bed with a bullet hole through the roof of her mouth. Nearby lay a book entitled "How to Shoot Straight," and a 38 caliber revolver with three chambers empty. She attended a matinee performance at Albaugh's theater Thursday afternoon and returned to her hotel about 4 p. m., seemingly in the best of spirits.

She Was Dead at Curtain Time.

Later, when it was time for the curtain to rise for her own show at the Academy of Music, where she was appearing in "The Truth," she had not yet put in an appearance, word was sent to the Stafford, and a bell boy was sent up to her room. Just as he approached the door he heard a pistol shot. Hurrying back to the office, he notified the clerks of what he heard, and an investigation was made and Mrs. Bloodgood was found stretched as described.

Before retiring to her room, she had a talk with her stage manager, John Fitzsimmons, who declares that he observed nothing unusual in her demeanor.

She Feared Prostration.

The only motive he can ascribe is that Mrs. Bloodgood feared an attack of nervous prostration. She had been working very hard, he said, and she feared a breakdown.

Mrs. Bloodgood left a note addressed to her husband.

The audience at the Academy of Music was dismissed with the announcement that there would be no performance owing to a sudden indisposition of Mrs. Bloodgood.

Members of Mrs. Bloodgood's company are a unit in declaring that they can assign no cause for her act other than the possible one of nervous breakdown due to overwork.

Created Sensation.

New York, Dec. 6.—The news of the suicide of Clara Bloodgood at Baltimore created a sensation in theatrical circles here.

As Mrs. John Bloodgood she held a high position in the society of New York, and general interest continued to centre here after she made her debut as a stage actress.

New York, Dec. 6.—Friends of Clara Bloodgood, the actress, who committed herself in Baltimore, state that she had been somewhat worried over the financial flurry in New York, although they do not believe that this worry had enough effect on her mind to cause her to kill herself. It is said that a large sum of money recently left to her by relatives was deposited by her in one of the banks which recently closed its doors. Intimate friends state that the sum tied up in the bank is at least $350,000.

CHILD BURNED TO DEATH.

Horrible Death of Little Three-Year-old Girl.

Athens, Ga., Dec. 6.—The three-year-old daughter of Joe Bryant, a woodworkman in this city, was burned to death Thursday.

The mother had gone to a neighbor for some milk and when she returned found her child in the hallway in flames. Before the fire could be extinguished the child had burned almost to a crisp.

To Revive Curfew Law.

Atlanta, Dec. 6.—A city ordinance amounting substantially to a revival of the old curfew law will be recommended to council by the police commission at an early date. The proposed ordinance will require all persons under 16 years of age to be attended by a parent, guardian or chaperone if on the streets after 7 or 8 o'clock in the evening. There has been no little trouble of late, say the police, caused by the kids and lassies of the town staying away from home until midnight or later. The police department frequently has calls from parents who are trying to find their son or daughter or their daughter and somebody else's son.

Indictments Charge Perjury.

New York, Dec. 6.—John R. Hegeman, president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company will be arraigned in the criminal branch of the supreme court to plead to three indictments charging perjury. Seven indictments against Hegeman, charging forgery, were recently dismissed.

Alabama Man Named by Roosevelt.

Washington, Dec. 6. The president sent to the senate the following nominations: To be United States attorney, William H. Armbrecht, southern district of Alabama; to be United States marshal, Gilbert B. Dixon, southern district of Alabama.

PAY DEPOSITORS IN FULL.

Declaration of Officials of Kansas City Bank of Commerce.

Kansas City, Mo., Dec. 6.—There was no suspension of a run made early on the bank doors in the early hours of Friday.

Bank officials generally give it as their opinion that the crisis resulting from the failure of the National Bank of Commerce has run over and that normal conditions would soon exist again. They insisted that there was no need for alarm and that the closing of the Bank of Commerce really cleared the atmosphere and marked the first real step toward a restoration of confidence.

Many depositors of the Bank of Commerce were reassured by the declarations of officials of that institution that it would not only pay depositors in full, but that stockholders also would lose nothing. James T. Bradley, appointed receiver by the comptroller of the currency, had no statement to make. Mr. Bradley was the receiver and wound up the affairs of the First National Bank of Topeka, which failed as a result of the collapse of the enterprises of the late C. J. Devlin, in 1906.

EDUCATIONAL CONVENTION.

Eighteenth Annual Session to Convene at Lexington.

Athens, Ga., Dec. 6.—The program for the eighteenth annual session of the Southern Educational association, which convenes in Lexington, Ky., Dec. 26, has been issued. In the proceedings of this convention the Georgia educators will be well represented.

President G. R. Glenn, of the North Georgia Agricultural college, at Dahlonega, is to make the response to the address of welcome. Ex-State School Commissioner W. B. Merritt is to make a report to the meeting concerning the work of the common schools in the state of Georgia. Superintendent C. B. Gibson, of the Columbus schools, is to speak of industrial education. President G. R. Glenn, of Dahlonega, is to discuss the county school system as compared with the district system.

DEMANDS $15,000 DAMAGES.

Over-Strenuosity of Stage Heroine Is Cause of a Suit.

New York, Dec. 6.—The over-strenuosity of the heroine in the melodrama "Convict 999," was the cause of a suit which has been filed against the lessees of the New American theater in New York. The plaintiff is Miss Fanny Silver and she demands $15,000 damages. Miss Silver attended a performance of the melodrama November 13. She occupied a seat in the front row.

In the last act of the play the heroine prevents the villian from attacking the hero by seizing a sledge hammer and menacing him with it. On the night Miss Silver saw the play, the heroine put so much strength into her acting that the head of the sledge hammer flew off and struck Miss Silver in the face, breaking her nose and knocking out two teeth. Hence the damage suit.

Overcome by Gas, Death Results.

Birmingham, Ala., Dec. 6.—Louis Hicks and Robert Morgan, both white, were found dead at the big furnace plant of the Tennessee Coal company at Ensley at an early hour Thursday morning and the indications are that they were overcome by gas and that death was almost instantaneous. The two men were working on a boiler and it is supposed that the gas explosion doors of the stoves adjoining the boiler were shirred by the wind and a large volume of the deadly gas covered the two men. They were taken unawares and death came to them quickly.

Bibb's Books Probed by Jury.

Macon, Ga., Dec. 6.—Books kept by the clerk of the superior and the city courts and those of the county ordinary were given an examination by the grand jury and reports upon the same will be made in the general presentments some time this month. The grand jury has not brought to a close all of its jury room work as several cases are yet to be investigated and a few more indictments on one charge and another are expected.

Convicted of Conspiracy.

Columbus, Ga., Dec. 6.—John Redmond, of Webster county, has been found guilty in the federal court of the charge of conspiracy to kill Deputy collector Charles D. Williams several months ago. The shooting occurred in Webster county while the officer was raiding a still run by the defendant. The sentence of the court was three years in the federal penitentiary and a fine of one thousand dollars.

Winnings on French Turf.

New York, Dec. 6.—Announcement of the winnings on the French turf the season just closed show that W. K. Vanderbilt, who headed the list last year with $165,725 this year. The largest winner was M. Caillault with $124,000, while Mr. Vanderbilt's total winnings were $65,725.

Named Mayor of Statesboro.

Statesboro, Ga., Dec. 6.—J. R. Miller was defeated for mayor by H. B. Strange on Tuesday by 40 votes majority.

RAID OF NIGHT RIDERS

Hopkinsville, Ky., Thrown Into State of Terror.

MUCH PROPERTY DESTROYED

Wild Mob, Shooting Right and Left, Terrorized the Citizens, Who Feared to Even Go Much as Open Their Windows—Tobacco Buyer Beaten.

Hopkinsville, Ky., Dec. 7.—Five hundred "night riders," masked and heavily armed, marched into Hopkinsville about 2 o'clock Saturday morning and destroyed property valued at over $200,000, while the citizens, in terror of their lives, feared to even so much as open their windows, and the police, fire department, telephone and telegraph offices, and even the railroad stations were in possession of a wild mob shooting right and left, the flames from burning buildings in the meantime lighting up the city and the surrounding country until it seemed that the whole town was ablaze.

Windows in the front of business houses and banks on the main street of the city were shot out, and the entire front of one newspaper which had been especially severe in its condemnation of the raids of the night riders, and which was owned by the mayor of the city, was demolished.

Fortunately only two men were injured, one of them being Lindsay Mitchell, a tobacco buyer who was severely beaten with switches and clubs and the other a brakeman who was shot in the back while trying to remove his train from the path of the flames.

The raid of the night riders caught the city unawares, as for some time the depredations resulting from the tobacco war had been of a minor nature, and it was generally thought that in the "dark district" at least the worst was over.

The property destroyed was as follows:

W. H. Tandy, independent tobacco warehouse, building owned by John C. Latham.

B. M. Wooldridge, association warehouse.

Tandy & Fariegh, regie buyers' warehouse.

In addition to these, the entire glass front of the Hopkinsville Kentuckyian, Mayor Meacham's paper, was destroyed, while windows in the front of the Commercial Banking and Savings company, the First National, the Planters' Trust company and the Bank of Hopkinsville were punctured with bullet holes. A number of other business houses and residences bear the marks of the night riders' bullets and it is considered remarkable that no one was killed.

The insurance is believed to be about $60,000.

PATROLMAN KILLED.

Negro Desperado Kills Popular Member of Police Force.

Atlanta, Dec. 7.—Patrolman J. A. Manier, popularly known as "Bix Six," one of the best liked members of the Atlanta police force, and perhaps the best specimen of physical manhood that it possessed, was shot to death Friday afternoon in front of a negro restaurant on Peters street by Andrew Johnson, a negro known as "Black Sport," whom he started to arrest, and who bore a particularly bad reputation and who was reeling from drunkenness at the time he fired the shot.

It required only one bullet to do the work, the ball passing from the point of the chin to the base of the brain. The officer fell to the pavement a dead man, while his murderer turned to flee.

Johnson was captured a short time afterward and lodged in jail.

Winnings on English Turf.

New York, Dec. 7.—The list of winning owners on the English turf during the season just closed shows Richard Croker in ninth place with three wins to his credit, all made by one horse, the Derby winner Orby. His winnings amounted to £22,035. Col. W. Hall Walker, member of parliament, leads the list of winners with twelve first, made by seven horses, the total winnings amounting to £68,500. King Edward won five firsts with four horses and won £14,720.

Little Child Burned to Death.

Atlanta, Dec. 7.—While playing near an open grate, the clothing of Bessie, the 4-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Adams, caught fire, and before the mother, who rushed into the room, could extinguish the fire which had enveloped the little girl she had suffered burns which resulted in the child's death early Friday night.

Rescued World-Be Suicide.

Minneapolis, Minn., Dec. 7.—Wm. Mortenson and Hagels Hoeng, school boys about 15 years old, jumped into the Mississippi river Friday evening and at the risk of their lives prevented Miss Ida Christianson, 21 years old, from committing suicide. The boys saw the woman jump into the river. She struggled against her rescuers, but was finally overpowered and brought to shore.

BRIEF DISPATCHES.

FRIDAY

H. G. Hunter has been elected secretary of the New Orleans cotton exchange.

President Roosevelt's message has been generally well received in official circles in Tokio.

Reginald Post, governor of Porto Rico, was renominated to that office by President Roosevelt.

Mayor Burchell, of Glace Bay, was arrested on the charge of embezzling $9,000 from the Dominion Coal company. He was released on $30,000 bond.

A six story factory building at Pearl and Lafayette streets, New York, occupied by Ault & Wiberg, manufacturers of printing inks, burned; loss estimated at $100,000.

The body of Jack Ryan, a longshoreman formerly of Liverpool, Eng., was found hanging by a strap fastened to a skid in his room at Port Arthur, Tex., Wednesday night. He was last seen alive in an intoxicated condition.

SATURDAY.

Winter Racing at Santa Anita park, near Arcadia, was inaugurated Saturday afternoon with a card of six events, including the inaugural handicap and the Pomona handicap, the latter with $1,500 added.

A New York dispatch says that after sixteen years in the courts the case of Macardell against Alcott has finally been settled by the court of appeals. The case grew out of the reorganization of the Houston and Central Texas railroad in 1887.

Mrs. Wm. J. Bryan and her daughter have sailed from New York on the steamer Friederich der Grosse for Europe and will spend the winter in the Holy land. Mr. Bryan met his wife and daughter in Pittsburg on Wednesday and after spending a short time with them, started west for his Nebraska home.

Marcellus Hopkins, president of the Southside Elevated railroad, died at his home Saturday morning in Chicago of pneumonia.

Tuttle Denies the Charges.

Honolulu, Dec. 8.—Guy H. Tuttle, who it has been alleged, is wanted by the federal authorities for complicity in the smuggling of Chinese into the United States from Mexico, is now employed as cashier of the Planters' Experimental Station. He denies the charges, and says that the authorities are not ignorant of his whereabouts.

Entered Plea of Guilty.

Macon, Ga., Dec. 5.—W. W. Walthall, a carpenter, entered a plea of guilty in the superior court Wednesday in the case against him for shooting Oliver Wilder, a foreman in the Central yards, last summer. This reduced his offense, and a sentence of 12 months was imposed. Wilder lay at the point of death several weeks as a result of the shooting affray.

Life Convict Said To Have Escaped.

Birmingham, Ala., Dec. 5.—There is an unconfirmed report in Birmingham to the effect that Frank Bissett, who was sent up for life for the murder of Mrs. Maggie Patterson, his sister-in-law, has escaped from the Henderson company lumber camp in south Alabama. Neither local officials nor relatives of the man are officially apprised.

Goolds Are Found Guilty.

Monte Carlo, Dec. 6.—Vere St. Leger Goold and his wife, Marie, who have been on trial before the superior court of Monaco, charged with the murder of Emma Levin at Monte Carlo last summer, were on Wednesday found guilty. Mrs. Goold was sentenced to death and her husband to imprisonment for life.

Town Marshal Kills Coal Man.

Jasper, Ala., Dec. 6—Alvin Baker, town marshal, shot and killed James Kirkwood, a prominent coal operator, whom he was trying to arrest for disorderly conduct. Kirkwood fired at Baker with a pistol, missing him, and Baker returned the fire with a shotgun, killing Kirkwood.

Cigarmakers' Strike.

New Orleans, Dec. 5.—Between 20 and 30 girls in the Hernsheim factory, a branch of the American Cigar company, struck Wednesday when notified of a reduction in wages. The amount of the reduction was not given out.

Judge Griggs Is Chosen.

Washington, Dec. 5.—The Georgia delegation met Wednesday night after the adjournment of the house democratic caucus, and elected Judge Jas. Griggs to represent Georgia on the democratic congressional committee for the campaign of 1908.

Old Editor Passes Away.

Grove Hill, Ala., Dec. 5.—James Grant, pioneer citizen and the oldest editor in Alabama, is dead. Mayor was born in North Carolina in 1820. His mayor here, known as the Clark County Democrat, was an influential publication.

Comptroller Issues Call.

Washington, Dec. 5—The comptroller of currency has issued a call for a statement of the condition of the national banks at the close of business on December 3.

LATE MINE HORROR

Eighty-Five Bodies Have So Far Been Recovered.

RESCUE PARTIES AT WORK

Heartrending Scenes Witnessed When Sobbing Mothers, Wives and Children Crowded the Hills Overlooking the Ill-Fated Mines—Rush Order for Coffins.

Monongah, W. Va., Dec. 7.—With unabated energy five rescuing parties working from every possible point to enter and explore mines Nos. 6 and 8 of the Fairmont Coal company, a subsidiary of the Consolidated Coal company of Baltimore, where a terrific explosion of black damp occurred on Friday, are putting forth every effort to reach the 315 men whom they have every reason to believe are still in the mine, dead or alive, although there is scarcely a hope entertained that a single one of the four hundred or more men who went into the mine has survived the terrific explosion and the poisonous gas with which the mines filled immediately after the death dealing crash.

Undertakers Busy.

Eighty-five bodies have so far been brought to the surface and the dozen undertakers from this and surrounding towns who were on duty all night, by daylight had these bodies washed and made as presentable as possible in an improvised morgue into which one of the mine buildings has been converted.

With the dawn of day there began a heartrending march up and down the aisles along which bodies were laid out, sobbing mothers, wives or sweethearts, orphaned children and strong men, each seeking a near relative or beloved friend. There are between 5,000 and 6,000 inhabitants in the mining town of Monogah and it is doubtful if in this entire population of between 5,000 and 6,000 inhabitants there are a score of persons who have not either a near relative or a close friend numbered among the victims of the disaster.

Heartrending Scenes.

Friday night hundreds of men stood about the entrance of the two mines. They said nothing, but when approached and asked a question they would give way to their emotions and often give way to tears. During the night few woman were to be seen, but all day Friday the women were the chief actors in most pathetic and heartrending scenes. They crowded the sides of the hills overlooking the ill-fated mines and cried aloud. As the day advanced they became almost crazed through grief and suspense. One woman pulled out her hair, handful at a time, another tore all the skin from both her cheeks with her finger nails. Some lay down on the frozen ground and cried themselves to sleep. In this condition many were carried to their homes nearby without awakening.

Rescuing Parties Formed.

The rescuing parties penetrated mine No. 6 about 3,500 feet before they came upon the first of the dead. A majority of the corpses will, it is believed, be found a mile further back.

It is hardly possible that all the bodies will be recovered for several days. The four hundred men were working in a locality one mile square. It will be days before a thorough search of all this area can be made.

As the searching parties advance they must clear away the debris. The explosion wrecked over six hundred mine cars and these choke the entrance on all sides. A peculiar and remarkable feature is that notwithstanding the force of the explosion very little of the mine roof was wrecked. By those who witnessed it, the explosion was likened to the discharge of a cannon. Every movable object shot with terrific force through the mines. At the entrance of Mine No. 8, a concrete powerhouse was completely demolished. A piece of concrete weighing fully 1,000 pounds was blown clear across the West Fork river, landing on the side of a hill. Great holes were torn in the hill on either side of the entrance of No. 8. Mine cars were crushed as though made of paper, and the huge steel tipple was blown apart.

40 Per Cent Americans.

The mine officials state that forty per cent of the victims are Americans. Fifty physicians are at or near the mines attending members of the rescuing party, many of whom have been overcome and needed medical attention. The company has sent rush orders for coffins to Pittsburg, Kansville and other towns, the total number ordered being 300 up to this time.

Preparations are being made to brick the mouths down the mines in electric cars with which the mines are equipped.

Clarence E. Jones, of Tidewater, will succeed Henry Hastings, of the supreme bench.

Party Elected President.

New York, Dec. 7.—Commander R. E. Peary was elected president of the Explorers' club at its annual meeting, but was unable to preside at the meeting owing to a sharp attack of quinsy, which confined him to his bed.

THE MINE PACK BURRO.

Information Obtained by the Newspaper Man in Camp.

He was a ... in the mining ... and he everything he saw ... graphic novel and interesting he kept up a rapid fire of questions that seemed mighty foolish to the boys.

The placid little pack burros, mostly ears and voice, pleased him immensely, and he supposed they were kept as pets or also as camp mascots to nibble the labels from old cans and eat stray newspapers. He came across one pack: a wheelbarrow secured on its back with wheel and handles in the air.

"My good man," he asked the owner, "can you tell me why the little donkey is tied to the wheelbarrow in that odd fashion?"

"I shore can, stranger," replied that accommodating individual. "This here jinnax has been acquired by old Walapai Huggins for a house pet at the Bully Boy mine, an', bein' as the animule is too dellycat' to walk all the way over them rough trails, the old man drives him uphill an' at the summit jes' naterally turns him down the other side. Yessir, it do come hard on old Walapai, but it's mighty restful for the jinnax."—Success Magazine.

Beware of Frequent Colds.

A succession of colds or a protracted cold is almost certain to end in chronic catarrh, from which few persons ever wholly recover. Give every cold the attention it deserves and you may avoid this disagreeable disease. How can you cure a cold? Why not try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy? It is highly recommended. Mrs. A. White, of Butler, Tenn., says: "Several years ago I was bothered with my throat and lungs. Someone told me of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I began using it and it relieved me at once. Now my throat and lungs are sound and well." For sale by Upchurch Drug co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thorsby.

ALL HALLOW EVE.

A Tradition Handed Down From the Ancient Druids.

The observance of Halloween, or All Hallow eve, is a tradition handed down from the ancient Druids, who celebrated their harvest festival on the last day of October. The next day was All Hallows or All Saints' day, and so they called the festival All Hallowmas.

The gay games of modern times are not much like the solemn rites of the Druids, but a connection may be traced between the supernatural beliefs of the ancients and the burlesque attempts to pry into the mysteries of the future which our own Hallowmas fun represents.

Long after the time of the Druids simple minded country people continued to believe in charms and witchcraft and especially claimed that on the night of Oct. 31 witches and goblins held revel and fairies danced about in the woods. From these spirits of their manifestations it was believed that the future could be foretold and human destinies discovered. As our celebration of the occasion is merely a whimsical adaptation of all this, there is one thing clear at the outset—to a successful Halloween party the young guests must bring a large stock of imagination, a zest for merriment and an unfailing fund of good humor, for many Halloween tricks result in turning the laugh on one or another, and this must be accepted in a gay, good natured spirit. Old fashioned Halloween parties were held in the kitchen, and where this is practicable it is a good place for many of the games. But all of the rooms used should be decorated with trophies of the harvest. Pumpkins, apples, grain stalks and autumn leaves offer materials for beautiful and effective trimming, and if desired draperies of red and yellow cheesecloth and ornamentations of red and yellow crepe paper may be added. Jack-o'-lanterns are of course a necessity.—Carolyn Wells in ...

SILVER KING OF THE SEA.

The Fight That a Tarpon Will Put Up When Hooked.

If you have never seen a tarpon leap the Mediterranean sardine that you take from the bait for such lengthened out to six or seven feet. Give it one enormous sterling black eye, a superstitious tip of the most generous shape coming down and twisting up again, a mouth that can be thrown so wide open that thirty feet distant when the fish is in the air you can see blue sky down its throat and out through the forked gills. Give the fish a greenish back and a long spine at the dorsal, a powerful sardine-like tail and equip its belly and sides with scales which look more like newly minted trade dollars than anything else, dollars often twice their natural size, into which the purest portion silver has been dragged, scales that flash thousands of rays in every direction, scales that gleam, corruscate and in the full glare of the sun form so many sunbursts to dazzle the eye and confuse the excited angler.

I have taken the "silver king" under various circumstances and have seen it leap ... the outer Florida reef and down by the Rio Grande, where it forms in gigantic schools and moves south in winter, and everywhere it is the same sensational equilibrist, the same air climber and sky scraper when hooked or snared. What the sensations of the tarpon are when hooked it would be difficult to say, but I fancy it is frightened and leaps in the direction away from the pain center, and use two leaps are alike.

It may go directly up into the air, carrying a big wave with it, and lash the air, or it may go out of the water head first, rising like a ray of light ten or fifteen or more feet, then fall gracefully. Every possible position I have seen the frightened tarpon take, from standing on its tail as upright as a soldier to exactly the opposite direction, and an old angler informed me that he had seen a tarpon make a lateral leap of thirty feet.—Charles F. Holden in Recreation.

A Little Too Original.

"You New Yorkers are wonders," said the man from the west here for a brief stay and seeing everything from the Bronx to the Bowery. "Nothing is impossible here—at least I saw vines twined across the sky last night. It was in a restaurant in Forty-second street," he continued. "The ceiling is painted sky blue, and there are little electric lights set to look like stars. Also there are the clouds floating about, but then there are the vines that kill the otherwise very neat illusion. Originality is all right, but vines hitched to a sky is too much for a man from the west."—New York Globe.

MAPLESVILLE, ALA.

The Castle Comedy

By Thompson Buchanan

This is a rattling good love story of merry old England at the close of the Napoleonic wars.

In the scene pictured here the wilful young lady is telling her father she doesn't intend to marry. She means she does not intend to marry the nobleman her father has selected. The reason, as the reader soon discovers, is that she has fallen in love with a French dancing master. Out of this complication grows the story.

Even if Thompson Buchanan were not a Louisville boy and had not written inimitable stories for the Herald we would not hesitate in surrendering to his Castle Comedy the palm for absolute fascination.

The Castle Comedy will be printed in this paper. Look for it.

KING OSCAR of Sweden died Sunday morning. He is succeeded by his son, Oscar Gustave.

CHICAGO has been selected as the place for holding the Republican National convention of 1908, and June 16 is set for the time.

THE biggest fleet of battleships ever gathered together by this country are now assembled at Hampton Roads, where they will start on their long trip to the Pacific next Monday.

Four thousand bills have already been presented in Congress, and doubtless there are thousands yet to to come, but, fortunately for us all, few of them will become laws.—Age-Herald

The crop-reporting board of the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Agriculture, from the reports of the correspondents and agents, Tuesday issued a report estimating that the total production of cotton in the United States for the year 1907-8 will amount to 5,581,968,000 pounds (not including linters) equivalent to 11,678,000 bales of 500 pound gross weight. The estimated production in 500 pound bales is as follows: Virginia, 14,000, North Carolina, 604,000, South Carolina, 1,091,000; Georgia, 1,898,000; Florida, 64,000; Alabama, 1,216,000; Mississippi, 1,536,000; Louisiana, 712,000; Texas, 2,490,000; Arkansas, 796,000; Tennessee, 298,000; Missouri, 40,000; Oklahoma, 919,000.

RAISED HIS WAGES.

The Way an Employer Got Square With a Faithless Assistant.

A story is told in Milwaukee concerning an elderly German who conducted a good sized manufacturing plant on the south side. He had an engineer at his factory who had been with him for fifteen years and the old gentleman had implicit confidence in him. It was with a profound shock that he discovered finally that the trusted engineer was "grafting" most shamefully.

The proprietor thought it all over for a long while and then sent for the engineer. When that functionary arrived the following dialogue took place:

"Ah, John! Good morning, John. How long haf you been vorking by this place?"

"Fifteen years."

"Ach, so. And vot are your wages?"

"Twenty-five dollars a week."

"M-m-m. Vell, after today it vill be $5 a week more."

The engineer thanked his employer profusely and withdrew. A week later the old gentleman sent for him again, and the same conversation ensued, ending with another $5 a week raise. The third Saturday he sent for the engineer again, and after the same questions and answers he raised his salary another $5 a week.

On the fourth Saturday the engineer was again summoned before the boss.

"How long have you been vorking here, John?" asked the proprietor.

"Fifteen years," replied the engineer, who by this time had grown to expect the weekly question and salary raise as a regular thing.

"And how much vages are you getting?"

"Forty dollars a week."

"Ach, so? Vell, you are fired."

"Fired!" exclaimed the engineer, almost fainting. "Why, you have been raising my salary $5 at a clip for the last three weeks."

"Sure I have," roared the Teutonic boss, all his indignation fizing out at once. "And the reason that I did it vas that it shall make it harder for you for vhen I fire you, you loafer!"—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

ON THINGS IN GENERAL

Centerville, Dec. 2, 1907

Dear Banner:—As I haven't written you in some weeks, I will now say that I am on another tour, two weeks of which I spent at Clanton, while in Clanton I attended Rev. F. M. Woods' church on two Sundays and heard him preach two very effecting sermons. On leaving I stopped at Montevallo one night, then came on to Six Mile, stayed three weeks with my daughter, Mrs. Jennie Hayes, and came to Rev. J. W Mitchell's, three miles from Centerville. While at Six Mile I attended Six Mile Baptist church one Sunday and heard Rev. J. H Connell preach. His church there is putting about three hundred dollars in repairs on their church house. I went to Methodist meeting at Harrisburg last Sunday. I think I will go to Maplesville tomorrow so as to be with the newly constituted church on next Sunday. Now, I am not a preacher but I love to go to church and hear about our duty to God and our fellow-men and of the prospects of getting home to a better land. I haven't gathered any news worth your while, but I am in sympathy with the people in their strain, caused by the stringency in money in money matters There seems to be a slackening just now and it is to be hoped all will be well soon. Our Thanksgiving day has passed and I fear with but little observance. Now, I don't know when Thanksgiving began, but the old New England Thanksgiving runs as far back in its history as November, 1621, when Gov. Bradford whose little colony scarcely counted one hundred people after they had gathered in their harvest appointed a day for that little Plymouth colony to meet and rejoice together. It was again observed when in 1630 Gov. Winthrop sent Capt Pierce to England to get provisions for his colony. It took so long that the colony had exhausted the very last means of subsistence when it was announced to the Governor that the top sails of the John and Mary, the ships in which Capt Pierce sailed, were in sight, which came ladened with wheat, barley, rye, oats, cheese and butter. Some of your readers knowing how quick a vessel can make a trip across the Atlantic now, may wonder why it took Capt. Pierce so long to make his voyage. In those days they plied the ocean in sail ships, being a long time before the invention of steam Consequently it was a much slower way of navigation. Thanksgiving days have been observed by our nation all along ever since the days of the Colonists. Gen. Washington, I think appointed while President, the first Thanksgiving day for National observance. Then Lincoln, after which it has become popular to observe the last Thursday in November as a Natioal holiday. Chriitmas which is not far off I hope will be observed by all of your readers as a day of thanksgiving to God for His gift of the Bible, which if we keep in one hand and God in our heart we will not fail. R. J. MITCHELL.

CHURCH FAIR.

The L. A. S. of the Baptist church will conduct a fair in the Masonic building on Tuesday, Dec. 17. Doors will be open from 9 a.m. until 10 p.m. Booths will be arranged in the hall of the Woodmen of the World. Fads and fancies, calculated to captivate the most fastidious will be on display, and will be sold at very reasonable prices. The proceeds of the enterprise will go to the pastorium fund of the Baptist church. The patronage of the public is earnestly solicited. Brunswick stew and hot coffee will be served during the noon hour at a moderate cost.

The SPORTING WORLD

The Forward Pass.

Possibly the chief fault among football experts this year is the forward pass and its restrictions. It is one of the elements of the new golden game that makes the play more open and less dangerous.

In the accompanying cut is shown a correct way to make a short forward pass. The throw is surer, more accurate and less apt to be blocked when two hands are used.

Another method is the end over end pass. The fingers lap considerably over the end of the ball in order to secure a firm grasp.

Carlsson, Swedish Yacht Race Star.

In view of the probability of Sweden challenging for the America's cup yachtsmen here are much interested in the man selected to take the helm of the challenger. In most cases of the kind the boat and her designer have been considered first, but this time it seems to be a case of getting something for John Carlsson to sail. He was chosen to command the cup hunter before even the size of the boat was decided upon.

Although well known to Scandinavians, Carlsson's fame has not extended outside the bordering waters of the far north peninsula. There he has sailed race after race for cups given by prominent yachtsmen of Stockholm, and he has been successful in most of them. The boats, however, were small. What he would be able to do with a ninety footer is difficult to say. No doubt he would make her foot fast, but whether he would be able to handle a cup size yacht the way Barr and Wringe have done is a question.

Army-Navy Game.

A football team that is good enough to hold Yale to a 0 to 0 score is something of a team; so is one that permits Harvard to gain only a single touchdown, and that one the result of a fluke, all of which indicates that the Army-Navy game on Franklin field, Philadelphia, this year ought to be a hummer.

Last year's sensational triumph of Annapolis, after years of defeat, removed the popular impression that the greater age of the cadets gave them an advantage that deprived the middies of hopes of victory.

Trotting Mare Dorothy Dombey.

After being sold to a Berlin horseman for $2,000 by her former English owner, E. A. Robinson, the little gray trotting mare Dorothy Dombey has just closed a campaign of fifteen contests, in which her best time was equal to 2:14¾, though she took first money seven times and second money five times and showed in the money three times for a gross result of $4,305 in stakes. Her average time was no better than 2:19, which is rated a star trotting performance in Germany.

Football Notes.

The University of Pennsylvania football players have a $65,000 clubhouse on Franklin field, and Mike Murphy allows them many privileges not usually held to be consistent for men in training.

Houser, the Indians' wonderful kicker and fullback, is one of the Cheyenne tribe and went to Carlisle from Oklahoma. His age is twenty-one, height five feet eleven inches, and he weighs 177 pounds.

Could Surely Bat Some.

The best hitting baseball team in the country, says an expert, would be made up of Orth, pitcher; Schreck, catcher; Chase, first base; Lajoie, second base; Cobb, Crawford and Flick in the outfield, all of the American league; Wagner, shortstop, and Steinfeldt, third base, of the National league.

Army-Navy Record.

The army and navy football teams have played twelve games since 1900. The navy won three of the first four games; then the games were prohibited by congress for six years, and since 1900 the army has won six games and the navy two. The series stands 7 to 5 in the army's favor.

Steele.

Mr. Editor—This is a good time to say something about the mortgage system, did any of you give one on this years crop, is it bothering you any, if yours is not bothering you doubtless you know some brother who is being harrassed by one who is in the worst box, terrible things aren't they, did you ever stop to think exactly what a mortgage on your crop is, you know it is a bombshell loaded with dynamite under your house, liable to explode any moment, it is worse than the nightmare for it bears down heavy on your mind, awake or asleep, it goes with you to your field and constantly nags at you making you dread the crop, it sits upon the clouds when you look up for rain mocking you, but with the fear that the rainfall may be too much or too little, it goes to church with you and sets in the amen corner and rolling its eyes at you, it mixes itself up with the sermon of the preacher and even with your very prayers, it protrudes itself between you and your wife making you feel that even she has been sold for a price and it objects to the care you want to give your children, claiming them as its own, if you or any of your family gets sick it objects to a doctor being sent for because it may take some of the crop to pay his bill and makes you and yours eat cornbread and clabber and fat bacon wh n you can get it, it claims poultry and eggs, milk and butter as its property, to be sold to satisfy its greed, if you send your children to school it growls and protests that mortgage children are too poor and need no education. Yes brother, when the mortgage comes in at the front door peace and happiness pass out through the back door. Now, do not give any mortgage next year, if you are a renter and must have help ask your neighbor to assist in getting supplies do not give a mortgage, sing it in your songs, preach it in the stand, pray it in your prayers, owe no man anything, not even your good will, for you should give that freely, keep your wife in the home, the children in school, serve God, do all these things and you will live long, be happy and prosper. BIG IKE Hemstitching.

In hemstitching draw the threads and baste the hem neatly with the sewing machine, having the stitch as long as you desire, without thread. Stitch close to the edge, as you would in ordinary hemming. This produces a nice line of perforations, which are regular and easy to follow.

In plain hemming on white goods or any thin material crease the hem first and then press with a warm iron. Basting is not then necessary, and time and labor will have been greatly saved by this operation.

Captain Thorncliffe followed Sir John Wilmerding out. Duberre locked the door after them. Next he straightened, with a monstrous sigh of relief, and in the candle light his face was lined with a great fatigue. A moment he stood thus, then stepped quickly across the room. He turned the key and opened the door of the clock.

"They are gone, mademoiselle. Now I shall see you safely to the house."

From her narrow hiding place the girl looked out on him with her eyes full of a wonderful light that had never showed there so plainly before.

"For my good name what return can I make to the noblest gentleman I ever knew?" she asked.

Duberre bowed low over her extended hand.

"None to the dancing master—just now, mademoiselle," he said, with meaning.

When Mistress Percy stepped out from the clock, and as she did so the figures of two men passed the window. Sir John Wilmerding, on the outside, started forward, but Captain Thorncliffe thrust one hand over the lover's mouth and pushed him back into the shadow, and from the captain's lips came the muttered exclamation:

"By gracious! She was in the clock!"

CHAPTER IX.

CAPTAIN THORNCLIFFE cast the week old Gazette aside with an impatient gesture.

"Nothing in the paper," he muttered; then went on smoking furiously and thinking just as hard.

Truly the genial captain had enough to occupy his mind. First, there was the Courtleigh girl, who had been most strangely perverse of late, even for her. She always took a large share of the captain's thoughts. Then loomed up Wilmerding's love affair, with the complication of May Percy's visit to the dancing master's room the night before.

When they saw her through the window by main force Thorncliffe had kept the jealous lover from rushing in to kill the Frenchman. They had followed Duberre and the girl from the lodge to the big house and witnessed the most respectful adieu. With great difficulty the watchers had crept so close that they could overhear Duberre thank Mistress Percy for her kindness in coming to tell him goodby and deplore the necessity that compelled him to hide her in the clock to save appearances.

Duberre had kissed her hand respectfully and gone away. The girl had seemed stunned or sad or not herself or something, for Thorncliffe could swear she said only: "Adieu, monsieur. May heaven keep you safe!"

Now, all these things were sufficient to worry the blase soldier. He had declared earnestly to Wilmerding that he believed the visit innocent and had induced the jealous lover to promise to wait until Duberre had gone, then get a quiet explanation from Mistress Percy. Whether or not the hot tempered Sir John could keep his head and his promise was an open question. The captain had come out to his favorite bench on the lawn, the one at which Pierre had played for the feast, to consider the matter.

But thinking did no good, and impatiently he turned back to the discarded Gazette. He picked it up again, and almost as he did so his glance caught an item that made him start. He took his pipe from his mouth to whistle, then laid it on the bench while he read the item through, his eyes all the time growing larger from astonishment until at the close he slapped his leg and burst out with a hearty roar:

"By the Lord Harry, it's just like him!"

Ethel Courtleigh, coming along the garden path, heard the enthusiastic roar.

"Just like who, captain?" she asked.

Captain Thorncliffe sprang to his feet and snatched off his cap, all confusion. "I—er—ah—beg pardon—'deed I do, Mistress Courtleigh. I—er—didn't know you were there."

"I think you might ask me to sit down," she said, laughing at his confusion.

Now, the captain's idea of war was to go right after the enemy.

"May I have that rose?" It was his very first question after they sat down.

She looked at him in mock surprise. "Why, how impetuous you soldiers are! You'd take a town before you begin the siege."

"Some citadels are best taken by storm," he answered meaningly.

Mistress Courtleigh threw up her head. "No, sir," she sniffed. "This rose shall be a reward of merit. I'll give it to you when you tell me what interested you in the paper just now."

Thorncliffe shrugged his shoulders. "Oh, that!" he said carelessly.

"'Oh, that!'" she mocked him. "Yes, you said, 'It's just like him.' Now just like who?"

"Why, that harum scarum young fool, Percy Latapie, of course. The scapegrace is in England."

"The French Percy in England!" cried the girl in horrified tones.

"Truly."

"Why, we shall all be killed!" she exclaimed in mock terror.

"Or led captive," he laughed slyly.

"But how do you know?"

"Listen." The captain picked up the paper and began to read:

"Word has just reached the war office that the notorious bandit known as 'French Percy' has left France and is supposed to be in England. Heretofore his disappearance from the French army has always presaged some disaster to England. He is the man who entered the English camp in the guise of a trooper and stole the papers of the commander in chief, escaping safely with them and delivering them into the hands of the French marshal, Soult. Numerous other desperate enterprises are credited to this Percy Latapie. It is said to be his boast that he has never failed in anything yet undertaken. From a source within the French lines it has been learned that 'French Percy' asked leave of Napoleon, saying that he wished to visit his family home in England in accordance with the dying wish of his mother, who passed away a year ago. His mother belonged to the well known family of Percys on the east coast. She ran away years ago with the young Vicomte de St. Croix. The family estate by entail has become the property of Sir Henry Percy, a stanch Tory, who would be only too glad to deliver over his renegade cousin. The place is now being watched. It is safe to wager that 'French Percy' will fail in that, his last daring escapade, or if he gets to the castle will certainly be captured. In that event the death of a spy awaits him. A reward of 500 guineas has long stood for the body of this Percy Latapie, dead or alive. The commander in chief himself offers, in addition, £100 for the capture of 'French Percy.'"

The captain paused and looked up. "And to think that little more than five and one-half feet of dead scapegrace should be worth £600!"

"But he is such a brave soldier," said Mistress Courtleigh.

"Do girls always love brave soldiers?" asked Captain Thorncliffe.

"Would Sir Henry Percy arrest his cousin?" she countered.

"Of course," answered the captain.

"And you?" she persisted.

"Perhaps," he laughed. "You see, I owe him one. I'll ride over to the garrison today and tell them to be on the lookout."

"Will you take your reward before you go?" she smiled, holding up the rose tantalizingly before him.

"And more, too!" he cried, seizing both hand and flower in his big grasp.

The girl gave a little scream. "What a grip, captain! Do you always"—archly—"always squeeze so hard?"

"I—I—didn't mean to hurt," he blundered. "You know, Ethel, I beg—I mean"—

She interrupted, laughing. "Come, I'll tell your fortune with the flower."

They bent over side by side with their heads close together. She held the flower, he pulled off the petals, and as one they repeated:

"One I love,
Two I love,
Three I love, I say;
Four I love with all my heart"—

Unnoticed May Percy had slipped across the lawn. She crept just behind the pair on the bench, then put her hands over her eyes.

"I'm not looking."

As if by magic the soldier and the girl stood upright a good yard apart.

"We were—er—just seeing how many leaves there are on a rose," murmured Mistress Courtleigh confusedly, holding up a dilapidated flower.

May Percy came gayly around the bench to kiss her blushing friend. "And to think, sweet, that I never knew before you were near-sighted," she said sympathetically. Then, turning to Captain Thorncliffe: "And how hard it must be on a brave soldier to have poor eyes. How can you see to shoot? And yet they say you are a famous shot."

Captain Thorncliffe drew himself up stiffly.

"My eyes are very good," he said. "Sometimes they see strange things."

Like a flash came the reply: "And being an English soldier the tongue never tells them. But, captain, would you ask Sir John Wilmerding to meet me here? I wish to speak to him."

Her woman's intuition told her that they knew. The Percy headlong courage sought quick battle if it must come.

Captain Thorncliffe bowed ceremoniously. "Certainly, Mistress Percy," he said, and started away to find Sir John.

May Percy turned to her friend. "Now, sweetheart, what were you doing? Tell me all about it."

Ethel Courtleigh's face showed only blank surprise. "Doing? Why, nothing," she said, "but reading in the paper about your cousin."

"My cousin?" asked Mistress Percy.

"Yes, the French Percy, your over the water cousin. Here it is," and she offered the other girl the paper.

May Percy ran through the piece hastily. "Why, father would never give him up!" she exclaimed as she finished.

"Indeed he would, though!" cried Mistress Courtleigh, with conviction. "Captain Thorncliffe said so, and the captain is going to ride over to the garrison this evening and warn the soldiers to be on guard."

"Eh?" A sudden wonderful thought seemed to strike May Percy. Her cheeks became red, her eyes big and sparkling. "Suppose"— she began.

"Oh, I know what you were going to say!" cried the other. "I thought so, too, as I read it. You are thinking of the two Frenchmen who came yesterday and slipped away last night. The little one, he had Percy's gray eyes. I wish he had stayed. We might have found out for sure."

"Yes," said Mistress Percy absently, "we might." Apparently she had lost all her enthusiasm, for she sat thinking deeply.

And now Captain Thorncliffe was bringing on Sir John. They came across the lawn together, talking low. "You ought to have allowed me to settle it last night," declared Wilmerding bitterly.

Captain Thorncliffe laid a soothing hand upon his arm.

"Be calm, Jack. 'Twas but a girlish freak. All will be right. You must not fight or kill him. You should not have worn your sword."

They were too close now for confidences, and the captain cried aloud to the girls, "Ah, Mistress Percy, see, I've brought your lover, and now I claim my reward."

"Do you think she is worth the service, captain?" laughed May Percy.

Mistress Courtleigh drew herself up with assumed haughtiness.

"Well, if you don't want me—come, captain." And they started for the garden.

Mistress Percy and Sir John looked at each other, and both knew that each understood.

CHAPTER X.

FOR quite a minute the man and girl looked at each other.

"You sent for me?" he questioned after a pause.

Mistress Percy raised her eyes, steely now, and looked Sir John over casually.

"I only wanted to tell you," she remarked in an even, polished tone, "that I think Dorothy Stanfield would make you a much better wife than I. She wants the position, you see."

"A mere excuse which means you don't," he blurted angrily. "You wish, then, to be released from our compact?"

Already she had forced him on the defensive.

"Do you wish so much now to marry me?" she asked with meaning.

"Certainly you must have good cause for your decision," he retorted.

Her eyes flashed a bit, but she controlled herself.

"I might say 'because'—that's a woman's reason—and, besides, it would save your self love a few wounds."

Sir John bowed. "Mistress Percy is strangely considerate. But do you remember you have promised to become my wife?"

The girl raised her hands protestingly.

"Don't, don't! Why remind me of my misfortunes? Remember it was my father's plan."

"True," he admitted, "your father's and mine. It was their plan first."

"Yes, Sir John." The eyebrows raised and the dainty nose tilted a bit more superciliously. "As I have remarked once before, you have always been a very dutiful son." Her tone was one of polite encouragement to a little boy for a good deed. Then as they faced each other Gaston Duberre appeared for his going away, and, wearing the coat left by Jacques Poitrey, the spy, came along the garden path from the lodge. He started to cross the lawn, but seeing Sir John and Mistress Percy talking, paused at the bench to wait until they should move away. His eye caught the paper thrown aside by May Percy. He picked it up curiously. In a moment Duberre was reading with eager haste.

Meanwhile the lover who came out to demand had instead drifted ignominiously into helpless supplication.

"May, you know not what you are saying. I have been your lover since childhood, since those days when we played make believe knight and lady in the park together, and I defended you with my wooden sword and killed a vicious dog for you. I don't remember when I haven't loved you. The love has grown with me. It is part of me. I couldn't rid myself of it if I would. Once we were friends and playmates. Then you liked me. I thought you loved me, and I spoke to your father. He was glad. You were willing. In the past few weeks has come a change. Why is it?"

Mistress Percy had taken a flower out of her belt and was pulling the petals from it in absent fashion. Now she paused, looked up into her lover's abject face, then, with a shrug, cast the mutilated flower far from her. No words were needed with that answer. Sir John's teeth came together hard.

"What o'clock is it?" said Mistress Percy, yawning. "It must be almost noon come," and she turned toward the castle.

The man sprang after her and caught her arm. "I won't be put off this way!" he exclaimed. "You have agreed to marry me. I have your and your father's word. The betrothal has been publicly announced. I'm ready to perform my part of the contract, and I demand to be treated as your betrothed."

The girl released herself and faced him. The scant Percy patience was all gone now.

"Ah, Sir John demands!" she sneered. "Has Sir John always so thought and word and deed treated May Percy with the consideration and respect due his affianced wife? Let Sir John question himself closely on this point."

At that speech Wilmerding went white and weakened. Only dogged desire kept his pleading.

"If there was any lingering hesitation or you did not expect to fulfill it, why did you promise?"

The dancing master had finished a second perusal of the story about "French Percy." Now he slipped the paper in the breast pocket of his coat and, attracted by Sir John's loud speech, stood up to listen. He rose just in time to hear May Percy, losing an

A CRAZY MAN

Found Eating an Egg Shell and all—People are Amazed.

A crazy man was recently found eating an egg-shell and all and it was gathered additional proof of his insanity, as every one realizes that the shell of an egg has no food value, and is both indigestible and injurious. It is just as crazy for a sane person to swallow a lot of cod liver oil to get the benefit of the medicinal elements contained therein, as for the crazy man to eat the egg shell and all.

Scientists agree that the oil or greasy part of cod liver oil has no medicinal value whatever, and only upsets the stomach and retards recovery, but it is the medicinal elements enveloped in the cod's livers and their oil which represent all the tonic and curative power of that famous old remedy.

Vinol contains all the medicinal, curative elements of cod liver oil, but is entirely free from oil, and is therefore, the best strength creator and tonic reconstructor possible to obtain.

The reason Vinol is so far superior to old fashioned cod liver oil and emulsions is because it is made by scientific, extractive and concentrating process from fresh cods' livers, combining with peptonate of iron all the medicinal, healing body-building elements of cod liver oil, but no oil.

Vinol is unexcelled to restore health and create strength for run down, debilitated, tired, overworked people, old people, weak women, nursing mothers, puny, ailing children, convalescents, or for people suffering with hard colds, hacking coughs, incipient consumption and bronchitis. Try it. If it fails we will return your money. Upchurch Drug Co., Clanton, Ala.

Good Cough Medicine for Children.

The season for coughs and colds is now at hand and too much care cannot be used to protect the children. A child is much more likely to contract diphtheria or scarlet fever when he has a cold. The quicker you cure his cold the less the risk. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the sole reliance of many mothers, and few of those who have tried it are willing to use any other. Mrs. F. F. Starcher of Ripley, W. Va., says: "I have never used anything other than Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for my children and it has always given good satisfaction." This remedy contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given as confidently to a child as to an adult. For sale by Upchurch Drug co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thorsby.

Not Business.

Two highland farmers met on their way to church.

"Man," said Donald, "I was wonderin' what you will be askin' for yon bit sheep over at your steadin'?"

"Man," replied Dougal, "I was thinkin' I wad be wantin 50 shullin's for that sheep."

"I will tak' it at that," said Donald, "but och, man, Dougal, I am awful surprised at you doing business on the Sawbath."

"Business!" exclaimed Dougal. "Man, sellin' a sheep like that for 50 shullin's is hot business at all. It's just charity."—Dundee Advertiser.

A Practical Letter.

There has recently been an outcry against the deterioration in modern letter writing, but the following epistolary triumph from a tailor has leveled things up.

"I have today issued a writ against you," wrote a tailor whose letter was produced in the Westminster county court, "for the amount of your bill. Trusting for a continuance of your esteemed favor, I remain," etc.—London Globe.

A Real Wonderland.

South Dakota with its rich silver mines, bonanza farms, wide range and strange natural formations, is a veritable wonderland. At Mound city, in the home of Mrs. B. T. Clapp a wonderful case of healing has lately occured. Her son seemed near death with lung and throat trouble. "Exhausting coughing spells occured every five minutes," writes Mrs. Clapp, "when I began giving Dr. King's New Discovery, the great medicine, that saved his life and completely cured him." Guaranteed for coughs and colds, throat and lung troubles, by Upchurch Drug co. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

MACHINE MILKING.

Dairymaids at Work.

By C. A. ARKLEY.

One feature of the point in which the recent national dairy show was an eye opener to many of the public and such dairymen as have not had opportunity to keep abreast of the line of improvement in mechanism for milkmaidens was the exhibit of dairy machinery and utensils in great variety. The "most elaborate" in sanitary milk pails, strainers, separators, coolers, aerators, bottle fillers, pasteurizers, bottle filters and all sorts of tinware, such as pouring cans and cream cans as well as numerous other items, could find the object of its consideration present in many types and could investigate their respective merits with the goods before his eyes. The importance of putting milk and its products before the buyer in wholesome and attractive condition would be suggested by the numerous bottles, caps, butter wrappers and packages.

Not only at the national exposition, but at a number of other shows and dairy this season, the milking machine in operation has proved to be a center of much genuine interest as well, of course, as of considerable aimless sightseeing. Crowds gather around to witness the performance of the "modern mammal." At the dairy show milking machines were in operation twice a day, affording a good opportunity to those who wanted to study their workings.

This matter of operation Erf, the well known dairy expert, explains thus: The teats are placed in cups from which the air is exhausted, producing a vacuum; hence the pressure of the air on the udder tends to force the milk into the teat and into the vacuum chamber. This suction is produced by pumps, and the principle is illustrated by the calf sucking the teat. A calf while sucking exerts a small amount of pressure in connection with suction, and in some of the modern milking machines this operation is reproduced.

While some of these machines have been invented for many years and have worked with a certain degree of success, the true principle of imitating the action of the calf's mouth on the teat was not invented until suction was produced at intervals. These intervals are known as pulsations. The intervals produced by the calf are due to the fact that the calf is obliged to take its breath and swallow, which relieves the teat of the suction at that moment and allows the blood of the teat, which has been drawn down by suction, to flow back. These pulsations have been reproduced in the suction principle and aid materially in the success of the machine.

Defects in the earlier machines no doubt created a certain amount of distrust as to the practicability of any device of the kind, but it seems that such difficulties have been greatly overcome. Improvements which have much changed the conditions of the milking machine industry of late are the enlargement of the milk ports through the pulsator, a filter between pail and stanchion, greatly reducing the number of bacteria, and the prevention of the surging of the milk through the tubes.

Marketing Swine.

Today men who handle hogs with an eye to profit push them along as rapidly as possible from the start, and there is no fattening period unless the whole life of the hog may be so considered. They are fed grain from the time they begin to eat and are marketed as soon as they can be made to weigh 150 or 200 pounds, regardless of age or time of year. After they reach this weight it is believed that they gain less in proportion to the amount of feed consumed, and it is more profitable to let them go and employ the feed and labor on a bunch less matured. It is believed that March and September are the best months for pigs.

The best time to market swine is as soon after this as they can be made to weigh 150 or 200 pounds. This should be any time after five months. If the market is rising and there is a prospect of it continuing to do so, it may be profitable to feed them some time longer, but it is our opinion that usually the best plan is to push them as rapidly as possible and as soon as they get in marketable condition let them go.—Farmer's Guide.

Paper Wrapper For Apples.

The use of the paper wrapper for apples preserves the brightness of the fruit, prevents bruising from contact in the package and, with some varieties, appears to assist in keeping the fruit in prime condition a little longer. Unprinted newspaper makes a satisfactory wrapper. It is adapted to the storage of high priced fancy fruit.

Utilize Lime Rubbish.

Old mortar and lime rubbish should be saved when pulling down or altering buildings. Its value in keeping bench soil sweet and open is not sufficiently appreciated.—Gardening.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson XI.—Fourth Quarter, For Dec. 15, 1907.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, I Sam. iii, 1-21. Memory Verses, 9-10—Golden Text, I Sam. iii, 9—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

(Copyright, 1907, by American Press Association.)

We have come to the last and the best of all the judges. The record in Acts xiii, 20, is, "He gave unto them judges about the space of 450 years, until Samuel the prophet." He is one of the men of faith of Heb. xi and in Jer. xv, 1, is associated with Moses as a prevailing intercessor. In Ps. xcix. 6, he is also mentioned as one who obtained answers to prayer. He was himself an answer to prayer, firstborn of Hannah, to whom the Lord afterward gave three sons and two daughters because she gave flannut up to Him (ii, 20, 21), an abundant recompense. The condition of affairs in Hannah's home is suggestive of many a home and many a life in the matter of an adversary to provoke and make to fret (i, 6). If there is no such adversary visible, the great adversary seems to have a thousand ways of producing fretfulness, and not many seem to know Hannah's way of taking the trouble to the Lord in prayer. Notwithstanding the threefold command in Ps. xxxvii, 1, 7, 8, to "fret not," it is a most common sin. How beautiful the saying of Hannah in i, 28, "As long as he liveth he shall be lent to the Lord." Have we said it about ourselves or any one or anything belonging to us? Then the prayer or song in ii, 1-10, in which the Messiah is first mentioned and the throne of glory, one cannot but wonder if Mary was affected by it when she uttered her "magnificat" (Luke ii, 46-55). Our lesson chapter opens with "and the child Samuel ministered to the Lord before Eli" (see also ii, 18). A fine opportunity for the teachers to explain how even a child may minister unto the Lord, referring also to Jesus, who, at the age of twelve, said, "I must be about My Father's business." If a special lesson for girls is needed, let the little maid of Israel of II Kings v be used, who ministered to the Lord by telling of His prophet in Israel.

One night or very early morning Samuel heard some one call him by name, and, running to Eli, he said, "Here am I, for thou calledst me." Eli assured him that he had not called and bade him lie down again. Not until this happened three times and Samuel for the third time ran to Eli did Eli seem to understand that the Lord was calling the child. Then he told him to lie down again and if called to say, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth" (verses 3-9). Eli was not in touch with God as he might have been, for he was honoring his sons (who were both bad men, although officiating as priests) above the Lord, inasmuch as they made themselves vile, and he restrained them not (ii, 12, 29; iii, 13). The veriest mite in one's eye affects our vision, and the least sin may affect our hearing. The priests of the Lord should, of all men, be holy. All believers are priests, and it becomes us as such to recognise ourselves as wholly the Lord's for His service, giving Him pre-eminence over all people and in all things (Matt. x, 37).

The Lord called for the fourth time, "Samuel, Samuel!" and then the boy answered, "Speak, for thy servant heareth." This was Samuel's first experience of direct communication with God (verse 7), and yet we do not infer that he seemed at all startled or overcome. From this time on Samuel had an ear for God, and God could tell him in his ear (chapter ix, 15), while many Christians would need a shaking to make them hear the voice of God. Let us trust Him for anointed eyes and ears that we may quickly see and hear all He would like to show or tell us. May He be able to say to us, "Blessed are your eyes, for they see, and your ears, for they hear" (Matt. xiii, 16).

The message concerning Eli is found in verses 11-14, and the judgments which were to overtake him and his house were because of iniquity which he knew and did not restrain. Sometimes we are powerless to do aught but sigh and cry to God, but in that case He puts a mark of approval upon us (Ezek. ix, 4). Eli had the power to put a stop to the iniquity of his house if he had only the heart to do it, but according to the law it might have meant the putting to death of his sons (Num. xv, 30, 31; Ex. xxi, 17). If we ever find little comfort in God or His word, we may be sure that there is some secret sin or desire or something that our eyes wink at (Job. xv, 11, 12). Let us pray God to search us (Ps. cxxxix, 23).

In the morning Eli, who probably had not slept much after Samuel's night call upon him, inasmuch as knowing what the Lord had said, and Samuel told him all and hid nothing from him (verses 15-18). Eli accepted it as just, saying, "It is the Lord; let Him do what seemeth Him good." Compare Job i, 21; Ps. xxxix, 9. It soon became known in all Israel that Samuel was established to be a prophet of the Lord, the Lord's spokesman, and that the Lord was with him (verses 19, 20). Compare Ex. iv, 16; vii, 1, for the definition of a prophet. Although Eli seemed wholly submissive, yet when tidings came that not only had his two sons been slain, but the ark of God taken, he was so overcome that he fell off his seat and died, being ninety-eight years old and having judged Israel forty years (chapter iv, 15-18; ii, 34).

Homemade Writing Paper.

A homemade blue ink for inside is this way: Take a large flowerpot, insert in the hole in the bottom a sponge, fill the pot with alternate layers of chalk, charcoal and small pebbles. The flowerpot thus filled may then be placed on a jar or other convenient vessel, into which the water can be received as it filters through.

To Clean Oilcloth.

To clean kitchen oilcloths under the stove or elsewhere make a weak suds of common laundry soap and warm soft water, adding to each quart of the suds one tablespoonful of kerosene. This wash may be used as often as necessary without fading the oilcloth and will keep it looking fresh and bright until worn out.

To Remove Paint Stains.

To remove paint from a dress spread some dry starch around the part stained, then wet the stain with turpentine. Let it rest for awhile and wet again, and then with the dull edge of a knife scrape off the paint, then sponge again with turpentine. Rub dry with a clean cloth. The starch is used to prevent the spreading of the paint and turpentine. If the color has been affected sponge with chloroform.

Makes the Liver Lively

Foley's Orino Laxative gives permanent relief in cases of habitual constipation as it stimulates the liver and restores the natural action of the bowels without irritating these organs like pills or ordinary cathartics. MERMAIDS OF LEGEND

Sea Women That Were Vouched For by Ancient Writers.

ORIGIN OF THE DELUSION.

These Traditional Creatures Were Probably Dugongs and Manatees. Real Maidens of Fable—Mermaids of Fiction and the Seal of Fact.

There is a decided fascination about the mermaids of legend. Considering their traditional form, it does not seem quite certain whether they can be included among the fair "humanities" of old religion, but it would be extremely interesting to see one. In all seriousness the truths and poetry underlying and inherent in the old myths are well worth attention, but apart from these there is something distinctly entertaining in the quasi-historical accounts that we have of mermaids and the heroic attempts at rationalistic explanation. The fancy has taken firmer hold on popular imagination than many of the old legends. Of course they are recognized as nonexistent; but, unlike the majority of mythological beings, they are invested colloquially with a sort of humorous reality.

A "History of the Netherlands" gives a circumstantial account of a great tempest which washed ashore near Haarlem a "sea woman" as she was swimming about. She was captured and cleansed from the "sea moss that had grown about her" and became a humanized creature, except that she was always trying to escape into the water. And it is added, "Many persons worthy of credit have justified in their writings that they had seene her in the said towne of Haarlem." In the sixteenth century off Ceylon some sailors captured "seven mermen and mermaids," several priests and physicians testifying to the fact and the latter leaving it on record that after examination and dissection they found the external and internal structures resembled those of human beings. Hudson, the famous navigator, declared that his ship's company had seen a mermaid, the upper part of her body like a woman, skin very white and long black hair. An old Iceland history tells of one near Greenland, "the neck and head in all respects like a human being." The Norwegian Bishop Pontippidan, who wrote in the eighteenth century, "records the appearance of a mermaid which was deposed to on oath by the observers." And not to multiply quotations proving the belief even of the learned in the actual existence of the mermaids, Pliny asserts authoritatively that "as for the meremaidens it is no fabulous tale that goeth of them, for looke how painters draw them, so thay are indeed."

It seems hard after all these weighty testimonies that we should be assured that the "historical" mermaids were only dugongs or manatees, seals or sea lions, especially as some of these interesting creatures measure some eighteen feet in length and are by no means attractive in appearance. Something in the shape of the head and the breast is relied on by the rationalistic scientists as explaining the delusion, but one is at a loss to understand how this can account for the circumstantial descriptions that have come down to us. Coevals of those old writers have proved to us by their paintings that they held very much the same views as to what constitutes feminine beauty as we have, and we should certainly not discover in the dugong or manatee anything whatever to suggest in the very faintest degree the idea of a pretty woman. Yet there is generally the implication of comeliness in the verbal pictures the old writers give of their mermaids, though Columbus, who reported that he had seen two or three, admitted that he saw no beauty in them. The seal explanation perhaps does the least violence to one's traditional ideas, as, whatever may be thought of its resemblance to a woman, it is in itself graceful and its face and eyes are pleasing.

There is, at any rate, a rather suggestive coincidence in the view that the mermaid of fiction is the seal of fact, for closely allied if not identical with mermaids were the "seal maidens" of a thousand fables. The accepted tradition was that these maidens assumed the form of seals, which they could relinquish at any moment by divesting themselves of the sealskins. Only if while they were disporting themselves in quasi human guise their seal integuments were stolen or hidden they would have to remain as "maidens" and could not resume the form of seals. We know on the authority of many a song and legend that willingly or unwillingly a man has been Easily Mixed Up.

Abraham Brown, of Winterton, N. Y., had a very remarkable experience; he says: "Doctors have got badly mixed up over me; one said heart disease; two called it kidney trouble; the fourth blood poison; and the fifth stomach and liver trouble; but none of them helped me; so my wife advised trying Electric Bitters, which are restoring me to perfect health. One bottle did me more good than the five doctors prescribed." Guaranteed for blood poison, weakness and all stomach, liver and kidney complaints, by Upchurch Drug Co. 50c.

PARIS IN 1900.

Never Had the Empire Seemed More Assured, the Court More Brilliant.

The last flicker of the candle, the last flame of the dying fire, is ever the brightest, and so it was with Paris in 1869.

Never had the empire seemed more assured, the court more brilliant, the fetes more gorgeous. The light hearted Parisians reveled in the daily sights of royal processions and cavalcades. The Bois de Boulogne and the Champs Elysees, where we were living at that time, were crowded with splendid equipages. I remember often seeing the Empress Eugenie, then the handsomest woman in Europe, driving in her daumont, the grave and gold liveries of the postilions and outriders making a brave show. Nor were four horses and postilions the privilege of royalty alone. Princess Metternich, the wife of the Austrian ambassador, often went out in similar style. The beautiful Mme. de Canisy and the Duchesse de Mouchy, the empress' greatest and perhaps only intimate friend, and a host of court ladies habitually drove out in great state and helped by the magnificence of their appearance to give to Paris that air of elegance and distinction which could neither be surpassed nor emulated by any other capital in Europe. Even among those who had forebodings of the gathering storm no one had descried the black shadow cast on the blue sky by the approaching figure of Bellona, her fierce eyes fixed on happy, smiling, tranquil France.—Lady Randolph Churchill in Century.

QUITE A NICE GAME.

Why the Girl Who Proposed It Lost Her Temper.

The other day Miss Fannie Lomer ran across the road to see an intimate friend. As is usual with young ladies, they had a good deal to tell one another. In the course of the conversation Fannie said:

"I used to think that Gus Simpson was a nice young man, but I just hate him now."

"Why, what has he done?"

"He's treated me shamefully."

"In what way?"

"Why, the other evening at a party I said to him: 'Let's play the old game of temptation. If I say "Yes" or "No" to your questions, I'll owe you a box of gloves, and if you say "Yes" or "No" you'll give me a box.'"

"Then what?"

"Well, after the party he took me home, and all the way there he talked as sweetly as could be about love and that men should not live alone, and all that. And when we got to the front gate he said, 'Fannie, I have waited for this opportunity a long time—will you marry me?' I whispered 'Yes' in a low voice, and"— (Here her sobs choked her voice).

"And what did he do then?" inquired her listener eagerly.

"He—just—chuckled and said, 'You have lost, Fannie; I take No. 9's,' then laughed with all his might. That's what he did." — London Answers.

A Tennyson Growl.

In Walter Crane's autobiography he gives an interesting picture of Tennyson. It was at a dinner party at the Rev. Stopford Brooke's and the poet was reading to the company his "Ballad of the Fleet" "in his deep, impressive voice in a way which reminded me of his own description in the 'Morte d'Arthur' of how the poet Everard Hall (which may have been himself)

"Read, mouthing out his hollow o's and a's, Deep chested music."

When the reading was finished and when the applause and gratitude of the small audience had subsided the laureate growled out, 'Yes, and to think that these wretched fellows of the nineteenth century gave me only $1,500 for it.'"

Marriage as a Failure.

There is more nonsense talked in the abstract about marriage as a failure than is talked about any other branch of the conduct of life. If a census on the subject could be taken I am sure it would be found that the majority of married people jog along very comfortably and are much happier in their united state than they possibly could have been had they remained unmarried. The number of divorces is usually quoted to prove that marriage is a failure, but what, after all, is the number of divorces in proportion to a population of many millions of married people?—Mme. Sarah Grand in London Chronicle.

SOME STATEMENTS REGARDING NEW THE

Followers of Cooper and His Novel Ide

Reason for Their Belief in Him.

With a theory that human health is dependent on the stomach and with a medicine which he says proves this theory, L. T. Cooper, a comparatively young man, has built up an immense following during the past year.

Cooper has visited most of the leading cities of the country, and in each city has aroused a storm of discussion about his beliefs and his medicines. Wherever he has gone, people have called upon him by tens of thousands, and his preparation has sold in immense quantities.

The sale of this medicine has now spread over the entire country, and is growing enormously each day. In view of this, the following statements from two of the great number of followers which he now has, are of general interest.

Mrs. Agnes Viggenhouser, of 942 St. Louis Avenue, Chicago, has the following to say on the subject of the Cooper preparations: "For more than ten years I was broken down in health. I could not sleep and I was very nervous. Gradually I began to lose my memory, until I could not remember things from one day to another. I had severe pains and cramps in my body, and I would at times see dark spots before my eyes. I was unable to do any work whatever, as my strength was failing. I had no appetite, nor could I take any medicine.

"I had about given up hope of ever being well again when I read of Mr. Cooper's remedies. I d[ecided] them a trial, and I began [to] at once. After taking the [first] two weeks I can say that I [felt] a woman. I ran out with [some] pains in my body have left [me] am stronger than I have [been] years.

"I cannot say enough [for] Cooper's remedies. They are [wo]nderful, for they have done [all] claimed for them in my case."

Another statement by Mr. Stewart, 109 W. Madison St., [Chi]cago, is as follows: "I have had trouble for years, and never [met] afflicted this way knows what [a] distressed feeling it causes. [At] time I have felt that I would [pay] any price to be cured. It is [by] accident that I heard of Mr. Cooper's remedies. I [then] made up my mind to buy a [bo]ttle of him. I used it for about [a] and it is impossible to tell [you] good it has done me. I feel [so] different. I have more life [and] than I have had for years. [Thi]s medicine certainly does [all] strengthen the whole system, [the] feeling and weak condition of [the] stomach has entirely passed [away] feel well again."

Tray For Odds and Ends.

One of the necessities required by the housewife when sewing is a receptacle for pins, needles, buttons, hooks and eyes, etc. A plate or saucer often serves the purpose, with the result that all the articles in the disk intermingle and must be fished out when needed. An infinitely better accessory for the purpose is the tray shown in the accompanying illustration. It is made of pressed glass and contains partitions which divide it into four compartments adapted for articles of various kinds. Only one partition can be introduced, increasing the size of the compartments. The latter provides a convenient means of separating the pins and buttons so that they can be instantly procured when desired.

DIVIDED INTO COMPARTMENTS.

"married to a mermaid
At the bottom of the deep blue sea," but in the case of the fortunate purloiner of a seal maiden's "troublesome disguise" there was no need for a submarine descent. She could quite comfortably live on land and, indeed, had to unless she found her sealskin again, though always longing, like the mermaid of Haarlem, to become a sea dweller once more. There is therefore unquestionably a certain poetic propriety in the scientific identification of the mermaid with the seal.—London Globe.

Renunciation.

"I have always been a good friend to you, Mrs. Jinx," said Mrs. Lapsing, with blazing eyes, as she rose to go, "but I am a friend no longer. You have talked about my husband. Right here is where our paths divulge. Good afternoon."—Chicago Tribune.

In the Smoker.

"What's my state? Wash.—and the cleanest state in the whole Union."

"According to that," remarked the traveler from Pittsburg, "I hail from one fit only for pigs—or literary men."

"Wealthy sinners ought to settle in my state," was the contribution of the Bostonian.

The man from Nashville closed the conversation. "This is too smart a crowd for me," he said, "and yet my state can beat any nine others you follows each pick out."—New York Times

Editor Banner:—Thanksgiving was dull in Richburg, due to the weather. The young people entertained last Tuesday evening by Miss s Mamie and Nannie Harbin at their home. Among the guests were Messrs. Butler, Davis, Fellows, Hall, Misses Wammack, Wood, Lawler; Mr Davis and Miss McClure and wife and Mr. Harrington and wife. The party was enjoyed by all, and all [left] homes, hoping to have an[other] party of going again soon. Miss Saxon was a welcome visitor in the home of Mr. C. C. Hall the past week, but has returned to her home in Martin Mills. Miss Benson of Laurel, Miss was the guest of Miss Lawler from Friday till Sunday. Protracted meeting began Saturday night and will continue throughout the week, conducted by Bro. Shepherd and wife, also Miss Nelson. A large time is anticipated. Miss Grady of Laurel is visiting her sister, Mrs. Morgan Boren of Mrs. Riche a son. The public boys of the town enjoyed themselves by having a surprise party on Mrs Geo Hymers', Mr. and Mrs. Harrington spent Sunday in Ratliffesburg, also Messrs Will Hall and Ernest Lawler.

of the Eagle tells the best, and times the time this.

The merry Christmas time is upon us once more, and the spirit of Christmas is also with us, despite the financial crisis and the consequent scarcity of money. There is a peculiar atmosphere about Christmas time, different altogether from all other seasons. An air of Christmas feeling predominates, all little differences are laid aside, offences forgiven and good fellowship abounds.

The Centerville Press voices our sentiments exactly, when it says the following:

The Press wants to thank the many subscribers who have called with most remittances for their subscription. It has been the means greatly helping us in a financial way, and in a most opportune time. Every one dollar paid on subscription does not hurt the subscriber, but the number who have paid, feel better for having paid it, knowing that they are reading for paid matter, and besides making the Editor, who needs the money, feel better have quite a number of subscribers who pay their subscription with pleasure, and have no excuse to make when the time to renew their dollar rolls around. We just can't help from liking them some, and it is a pleasure to work for them. They appreciate the paper and the Editor appreciates them.

Whiskey! whiskey! why not get rid of it out of this county as well as elsewhere? It would lighten the mothers heart if it was out of the reach of every young man, but in spite of it being that, the young men will go in any direction and get the stuff, it is not only down right at the blind tiger, if they have to go to Maplesville they are sure to get back drinking, there are some men that are in the mud alike. I would not see my boy with not a cent in his pocket and just enough to get drunk on than to see him drunk and have money to spend, of course they can get it better than to buy the stuff of those who are many who sells it, but they will go to the spring, from the branch and instead of drinking whiskey, now young men, dont carry your bottles to the church, leave them at home and don't buy them at all.

Died.

Alvon Sorrell was borned June 1900; died November 28, 1907. Alvon was a bright boy, of course his dear father and mother were both grieved but he had many friends who regretted to give him up, and it was soon thought that God did not stay long when at last he called for the little soul. It is hard to part with one so dear, but God makes no mistakes, the father and mother should be comforted in the thought that their dear child is now in the paradise of God where there comes no trouble or pain but eternal rest and happiness, it is a sweet thought that we shall some day see all the good and pure if they only live for Him who died for us. Father, mother, do not grieve, for when dear is relieved of all sorrow and pains, 'tis true you had to say goodbye, 'tis true it brought sorrow and sigh to part with Walton for a while below and him on earth no more to know, but if to God you will be true, dear in heaven you will meet Your GRANDMOTHER.

There is something about Kennedy's Laxative Cough Syrup that makes it different from others, as it is both a free yet gentle action of the bowels through which the cold is driven out of the system. CLANTON, ALA.

Many people seem to think that unless they can open a Savings Account with not less than $50.00 or $100.00, it is not worth the while to begin. This is not a correct position to take. If a person cannot open an account with more than $1.00, and really desires to get some money ahead, then he should begin with even $1.00. The first dollar saved and put in bank, is the initial step on the way to prosperity. "Great oaks from little acorns grow." As a rule, the person who "Puts off" the opening of a Savings Account until he has a large amount to deposit, is not likely to ever have a bank account. We solicit your account.

Editor Banner—Please allow me space in your paper to say a few words. Health of our community is very good; we are having very cool weather. Christmas is near at hand. Now, let us think to celebrate the birth of our Saviour in a quiet manner. I am very sorry to know that some of our church members can't control themselves at that time. Brethren, just take the money that you would spend for that sinful stuff called whiskey; give it to some poor minister of the gospel. Remember giving to the poor is lending to the Lord and the Lord will bless you, and on your next conference day be at church feeling perfectly clear, instead of buying a little whiskey for medicine and get drunk and curse the church dance and hollow till you are ashamed to go to your next conference. I say a true christian will not drink the sinful stuff nor go to a dancing or candy breaking, that the devil and his fellows call a little pastime. They say there is not a bit of harm in the children having a little fun. Now, some of these children look very large and rough; it looks bad to see young church members, and old ones too, dance all the winter and then when the protracted meeting comes on go to meeting and feel so bad over their past life that they want everybody saved. Poor preacher offers an opportunity for prayer and here comes the majority of the church. Do you call that religion? I say it is not. Best wishes to the Banner. A Subscriber.

Died.

On the 9th inst., after a long and useful life, Mrs. Chrine Gaines died on Sunday night, aged 72 years. She ate supper as usual; next morning she was found in the bed speechless; she never spoke again, and passed on to a higher life the same. She leaves nine children and many friends. She has left the world better by having lived in it. A good record is far superior to riches. Sleep on, dear friend, till God calls your children one by one to join you in the realms of bliss. Many deeds of kindness you can silently lend you, dear children, to walk in her footsteps of usefulness. Mrs. Ina Campbell,

Last Sunday night Mr. John Sewel's home was saddened; the death angel visited their home and took from them, Mrs. Elizabeth Terry, Mrs. Sewel's mother. Mrs. Terry has been a faithful member of the Baptist church for many years, has been a valuable christian and a faithful mother and it was one prayer after another to the end. May the sad family live in peace and rest in ease, and when they are done with this world may they be safely landed by her side where there is no more sorrow nor pain. Weep not, dear ones, for you know she is resting peacefully in heaven awaiting for her bereaved ones.

DENVER IS SELECTED

Democratic National Convention to Be Held There.

TIME SET IS JULY 8TH 1908

Spirited Debate Resulted Over Acceptance of the $100,000 Offered by the Colorado City for Convention Purposes—Publicity Resolution.

Washington, Dec. 13.—After deciding to hold the next democratic national convention at Denver, Colo., and fixing the date of the meeting for July 7, 1908, the democratic national committee late Thursday entered upon a spirited debate on the propriety of accepting more than the $100,000 offered by Denver for the convention than actually was needed to pay the convention expenses in that city.

The opposition to the acceptance took the form of a resolution by Representative Clayton, of Alabama, declaring money not actually needed for convention purposes, but after a long debate the resolution was laid on the table by a vote of 31 to 14.

The committee held two sessions during the day, the principal business of the first session after roll call being the discussion of the following resolution presented by R. M. Johnston, of Texas:

"Resolved, That the democratic national committee cordially approves the movement now under way to secure publicity in the states as well as in the nation of money contributed and of expenditures made by any association or any other organization for political purposes."

Cromwell Gibbons, of Florida, approved this resolution, and Senator Tillman spoke upon it in characteristic manner. He offered an amendment to the resolution which was of the same purport, and he said he did so in order to make it more explicit.

Senator Stone, of Missouri, wished to make the resolution read so that it would prohibit all kinds of contributions, whether money or anything else.

Mr. McGraw moved that the thanks of the committee be extended to Perry Belmont because of what he had done to secure publicity of campaign contributions. The resolution was adopted.

The committee, before adjournment, received the standing committee of correspondents of this city, consisting of Maurice Splain, J. P. Hornady and Thomas J. Pence, who requested that when arrangements for the press at the convention are made, they should meet jointly with the press committee of the convention to take up matters concerning arrangements for the accommodation of correspondents. This was agreed to, and the committee adjourned.

TWO PERSONS ASPHYXIATED.

Infant's Cries Save Eight Others from a Like Fate.

Allentown, Pa., Dec. 13.—The cries of an infant saved the lives of eight persons here early Friday, but not before the baby's father and brother had been asphyxiated by coal gas.

The dead are:

Nicholas Contravo, 36 years old.

Joseph Contravo, aged 4 years.

Contravo, with his wife and two children, slept in one room and six boarders occupied other parts of the house. The escaping coal gas awakened the baby, whose cries aroused one of the boarders. He broke down the door of the room occupied by the Contravos and found the father and son dead. He then rescued the mother and baby and roused the other boarders, who had also been overcome.

Election at Cartersville

Cartersville, Ga., Dec. 13.—In the municipal election held here Thursday, Joseph Moon, a prominent lawyer, was elected mayor. He received 202 votes. He defeated Paul Gilreath, the present mayor, who received 172 votes. The following were elected aldermen: S. C. Watkins, first ward; H. J. Gault, second ward; W. I. Alley, third ward; M. F. Word, fourth ward; J. Mathews, T. M. Stinson, J. A. Allatt, John Stanford, aldermen at large.

Benefit to Former Actress.

New York, Dec. 13.—An enormous audience gathered at the Broadway Theater Thursday for the benefit tendered to Mrs. Melico Rankin, once known to the stage as Kitty Blanchard, who is now ill and in need. The net receipts of the benefit were $7,500. The principal number of the program was the trial scene from "The Merchant of Venice," with Ernesto Novelli, the famous Italian tragedian, as Shylock, and Viola Allen as Portia.

Large Deal Consumated.

San Francisco, Calif., Dec. 13—One the largest deals arranged here e the fire of April 18, 1906, was, it is said, consumated Thursday when the papers were signed by which the American Can company, the wealthy eastern concern, absorbed the United Can company, its largest rival on the Pacific Coast. The considerations exceed $1,000,000 but the parties to the transacti n refused to divulge the exact amount.

UNIQUE PANTOMIME.

Leaders of Chicago Society to Take Part in Entertainment.

Chicago, Dec. 14.—All "living music," leaders in Chicago society will take part in a tableau series of pantomimes at Orchestra hall, Jan. 7 and 8. Dramatic representations of four elaborate musical compositions will be portrayed on the stage with the Thomas orchestra giving the accompaniments.

Upwards of a hundred persons will appear in the several scenes which, for richness of setting, it is said will eclipse anything of the kind ever attempted before in Chicago.

One musical pantomime, "Jack Frost," the stage setting of which is an ideal Italian garden, never has been given before and another "Errinaos," an adaptation from an old Greek tragedy set to music written by Massenet, has been given only once on the stage. That was in Paris, in 1889, when it was given for a week and proved the sensation of a season in the French capitol.

The invalid fund for members of the Thomas orchestra is to reap the finar ial profit from the entertainments.

RABBI HIRSCH'S APPEAL.

Urges That Patience Be Shown Peculiarities of Russian Jews.

Chicago, Dec. 14.—A stirring appeal on behalf of Jewish emigrants from Russia was made by Rabbi Emil G. Hirsch Friday night before the Men's club of the Fourth Presbyterian church. Dr. Hirsch urged that patience be shown Russian Jews when they protest against Christmas celebrations in the public schools.

"You must remember," he said, "that Christmas day in Russia is a day of fear and trembling for the Jews. On that day no Jewish home is safe from insult and the men fear for their lives.

"When they flock over to this country, you must expect that they will carry with them some of their peculiarities. The newly arrived immigrants do not know but that Christmas here means the same to them as in Russia. It is for us to show them that here is the land of toleration and freedom."

RUMOR OF EXTRA SESSION.

Will Gov. Smith Convene Georgia Solons Early Next Year?

Washington, D. C., Dec. 14.—Governor Hoke Smith was the guest at luncheon Friday of Senators Clay and Bacon.

The lunch was served in the senate restaurant and the other senators invited to meet the Georgia governor were Senators Culberson of Texas; Tillman, of South Carolina, and Overman of North Carolina.

The impression has been received by Georgians here from bits of gossip that have leaked out after certain conferences held during the past two days, that the governor will call the legislature in extra session early next year to enact into law certain pledges to the people of Georgia which were set forth in the Macon platform but failed of passage at the regular session.

STORM AT PENSACOLA.

Considerable Damage Done to Shipping in the Harbor.

Pensacola, Fla., Dec. 14.—The storm which struck Pensacola at an early hour Friday morning did considerable damage, but confined itself to the shipping interests.

The wind attained a velocity of 45 miles an hour from the east and at its height the Russian ship Avenia, at anchor in the harbor, dragged her anchors, colliding with the British bark Emma Parker, damaging that vessel to a considerable extent.

Four loaded barges and five empty ones broke their moorings and were beached, while a large quantity of timber moored to vessels went adrift in the harbor.

Lifetime in Prison, Fears Liberty.

New York, Dec. 14.—Forty-seven years a convict, and now a free man, Franz Hoffman, in years of service the oldest prisoner in New York state, is afraid to leave Sing Sing prison and come to this city, where he fears he may be run over or lost. Hoffman has heard of elevated railroads and subways and of the new and strange things to be found in New York, and the thought of it all frightens him so that he begged leave to remain in prison until next week, when a keeper will accompany him here. Hoffman was convicted of murder in the second degree forty-seven years ago.

Died From Result of a Blow.

Savannah, Ga., Dec. 14.—Captain J. P. O'Brien, of Darien, died here on Saturday morning from the effects of a wound in the head, inflicted by Mr. Wilmer Kitt, a night clerk in Hicks' restaurant, about a week ago. Kitt claims he struck the captain in self-defense.

Miss Harriman To Wed.

New York, Dec. 14—An account was made Friday night of the engagement of Miss Cornelius H. Harriman, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Harriman, to Robert Livingston Gerry, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Gerry.

FIGHT WITH BANDITS

Band of Sixty Make Attack on Train in Trans-Caucasia.

REPULSED BY THE GUARD

Many Passengers and Soldiers Were Wounded and Five of the Bandits Were Killed—Attack Was Daringly Conceived and Carried Out.

Tiflis, Trans-Caucasia, Dec. 14.—A band of sixty robbers attacked and derailed the mail train running between Tiflis and Baku Friday night near the station of Balakhin.

The train was carrying a large sum of money. The train guard repulsed the bandits after a fierce fight in which many passengers and soldiers were wounded. The bandits finally retreated, leaving four dead behind.

The attack was daringly conceived and carried out. Thirty yards of the track on a down grade had been torn up and the train, running at full speed, plunged its way over the gap. Both locomotive and most of the cars were ditched.

The robbers, who were hiding nearby, immediately came out and advanced on the train guard and passengers. They threw eight bombs and opened a heavy fire on the confused passengers. The train guard rallied quickly and returned this fire from behind the mass of wreckage. They held their ground tenaciously until the robbers were driven off, carrying their wounded with them.

A hospital train has brought a number of the wounded passengers and guards to Tiflis.

Troops are in pursuit of the train robbers.

SITUATION AT GOLDFIELD.

Wage Scale Adopted Has Been Suspended for Ten Days.

Goldfield, Nev., Dec. 14.—Secretary Erb, of the Goldfield Mine Owners' association, announced Friday after a meeting of the executive committee of the association, that a resolution had been passed suspending the wage of the association recently adopted for ten days at the request of the American Federation of Labor. During the ten days a committee of the American Federation and the association will perfect a new wage scale which will be satisfactory to the American Federation. This arrangement will also affect the employees of the Nevada-California Power company, who walked out Thursday, and under the new agreement these employees will return to work, thus removing the imminent possibility of shutting down of the plant of the power company, which furnishes all of the power to the lines and the lights and power for the city of Goldfield.

The new arrangement also affects the carpenters and engineers in the mines and those men who are not affiliated with the Western Federation of Miners will resume work in the mines.

TOWN SWEPT BY FLAMES.

Alexandria, Tenn., Suffers Loss of Between $30,000 and $40,000.

Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 14.—Fire at Alexandria, Tenn., at midnight Friday night caused a loss of between thirty and forty thousand dollars in the business portion of the town.

The bank, postoffice and hotel were among the buildings destroyed.

The insurance will not exceed $5,000.

Motion to Delay Execution.

Atlanta, Dec. 14.—Judge W. R. Hammond and J. C. Chapman, who were appointed by Judge L. S. Roan, of the superior court, criminal branch, to defend Andrew Johnson, the negro who was sentenced to be hanged on January 3 for the murder of Policeman J. A. Manley, Friday afternoon filed a formal motion for a new trial. Judge Roan set Dec. 23 as a date to hear the motion. In the event he grants it, the date of execution will be deferred, and if he refuses it, a bill of exceptions will be filed. In either event, the execution will be postponed.

Train in Cyclone Shows Rough Usage.

Lecdburg, Ga., Dec. 14.—The sleeping coaches that went through the brush on the Coast Line the night of the big wind the week passed back Friday showing many signs of rough usage. All the sashes on one side were broken and the cars were badly scarred. No one was hurt, but a passenger reports it a very rude awakening, occurring as it did, at 1 a. m.

SAYS NO THIRD TERM

President Roosevelt Stleaks Talk on That Subject.

AUTHORITATIVE STATEMENT

The President Adhered to His Decision Made After the Election in 1904 That He Would Not Accept a Third Nomination.

Washington, Dec. 12.—President Roosevelt will not be a candidate for a third term. All doubt on this point was Wednesday night dispelled by the authoritative statement from the White House that Mr. Roosevelt still adheres to the declaration of renunciation made on the night of the election three years ago. In the statement issued President Roosevelt says he has not changed, and shall not change, the decision communicated to the American people in 1904.

It appears that President Roosevelt has been awaiting the call for the republican national convention to afford the proper opportunity for making his position clear and unmistakable, thus leaving the field clear for Fairbanks, Taft, Cannon, Knox, Foraker and others declared or respective candidates for the republican nomination. The president's statement follows:

"On the night after election, I made the following announcement:

"'I am deeply sensible of the honor done me by the American people in thus expressing their confidence in what I have done and have tried to do. I appreciate to the full the solemn responsibility this confidence imposes on me, and I shall do all that is in my power not to forfeit it. On the 4th of March, next, I shall have served three and a half years, and this three and a half years constitute my first term. The wise custom which limits the president to two terms regards the substance and not the form, and under no circumstances will I be a candidate for or accept another nomination.'

"I have not changed, and shall not change the decision thus announced."

BRYAN STOCK RISING.

Third Term Renunciation of Roosevelt Cheers up Democrats.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 12.—The democratic national convention will in all probability meet the latter part of June next year. Bryan, it is said, will be the nominee. The choice of location seems to lie between Chicago, Louisville and Denver, with Cleveland, also, in the running. Kansas City and St. Louis seem to be out of it.

WILLIAM J. BRYAN.

His supporters say Bryan is just as much the nominee of the democratic party for the next race as though the convention had finished its work. The declaration of President Roosevelt reiterating his election night pledge that he would not be a candidate for a third term, has wonderfully inspired the national committeemen who have been discussing the outlook. Many of them have expressed the belief that the president, handicapped by the third term millstone, would prove an easy victory for Mr. Bryan. With President Roosevelt out of it, they believe Mr. Bryan can defeat any man the republicans can name. He is more closely identified with the Roosevelt program than any other man in the country in either party. He has fought for them, urged them and praised the president when the latter put them into effect.

Coast Line Trains Collide.

Ledyard, Ga., Dec. 12.—Wednesday morning freight trains Nos. 209 and 208, of the Atlantic Coast line ran together, which resulted in wrecking of the cars which were almost completely demolished. A negro brakeman threw open a switch which allowed the westbound engine to crash into the eastbound freight. Several hours were required to clear the debris. The disorder cannot be estimated but it is thought to be comparatively light. The engineer and conductor were slightly hurt.

Turned Over to Sheriff.

Augusta, Ga., Dec. 14.—George Baston and R. A. Baker, two white men, supposed to be the yeggmen who dynamited the Sharon Bank, were arrested on an incoming Georgia train by the Augusta police Thursday morning. Later they were turned over to the sheriff of Taliaferro county.

Murderous Work of Robbers.

Kansas City, Mo., Dec. 14.—B. Sternberg, a grocer in Kansas City, Kans., was killed and his wife injured by robbers who attacked them in their store Saturday night. It is believed that the robbers opened a can of sardines and in the [illegible] placed an open can before the [illegible] struck him down with an [illegible]. The robbers then entered the [illegible] apartments back of the store and attacked Mrs. Sternberg with a [illegible] cleaver. She cannot live. The robbers took $75 and escaped.

Dean Held for Robbery.

Macon, Ga., Dec. 14.—Prof. [illegible], a negro, who, according to [illegible] Brown, a photographer, made an attempt to rob him over a week ago has been captured by the police and is now held under charge of highway robbery. When Brown saw the negro Saturday he called upon Policeman Johnson to make the arrest as the negro was held. Brown stated that Dean tried to rob him in the dark and there were several struggles with knife made to ward off the attack.

Enforce Prohibition.

Augusta, Ga., Dec. 14.—Judge [illegible] P. Bell, of the city court, has issued from the bench the instruction for a vigorous campaign against all [illegible] and misdemeanors of all sorts, particularly against all who violate the pending state prohibition law. It is the intention of Solicitor J. C. Black, Jr., of the city court, to [illegible] test cases against the first [illegible] that opens in this county, and it is presumed the belief that he will be able to secure convictions.

Major Barbot to Resign.

Augusta, Ga., Dec. 14.—Major D. Barbot has announced his intention of resigning his command of the third battalion (unassigned) National Guards of Georgia, to take effect immediately after inspection. The battalion has previously been a part of the Third regiment and Major Barbot has been in command for a long time. It is understood Major Barbot is slated for a position on the staff.

Negro Killed by Another.

Macon, Ga., Dec. 14.—[illegible] Slip, a negro, was mortally wounded Sunday by a negro friend on Poplar street while the two were playing with a revolver. The injured negro was shot through the body near the heart and expired soon after being taken to the city hospital. The [illegible] has not yet been able to get to work to [illegible] whether the shot was accidental or not.

Tybee Shoe Factory Burns.

New Orleans, La., Dec. 14.—[illegible] early Sunday destroyed the [illegible] shoe factory, one of the largest in the south. The loss is $100,000. The fire spread to several buildings near the factory, but the [illegible] escaped with some of their [illegible].

Seven Firemen Injured.

Saginaw, Mich., Dec. 14.—Seven firemen were injured, [illegible] have fatally, in the collapse of the Saginaw Bottle and [illegible] company's plant [illegible] early today. The property loss is $50,000.

[illegible] Taken by Which Foreign Gold Coin Arriving by Ship Is Made to Turned Into American Coin Lies by Abrasion.

[illegible] amount worth of gold [illegible] Bank of England, says the [illegible] of the expensiveness in New [illegible] to ship coupled a trifle [illegible] buying a piece of real [illegible] Whatever difference there is [illegible] is in favor of the gold purchaser. If you are pretty sure to get [illegible] of your money.

[illegible] gold bought by the large [illegible] of New York and other [illegible] cities is purchased from the [illegible] England or the Bank of [illegible] Its purchase is arranged for [illegible] of French agents of the [illegible] cities to secure the gold [illegible] that will have to be paid [illegible] only upon the demand. In [illegible] when every dollar of gold [illegible] is secured in being eagerly [illegible] bankers here, the price is as [illegible] and 6 per cent.

[illegible] most of the gold is secured [illegible] comparatively few extra [illegible]. An extra detective or [illegible] Scotland Yard, perhaps, and [illegible] other private detectives employed by the Bank of England for the protection needed [illegible] imported into this country [illegible] one of two forms. It is either [illegible] or in coin. If in coin it is [illegible] American money that has been [illegible] to some previous year, for [illegible] relatively small amount of foreign coin is brought here. Whether [illegible] coin, however, it is all shipped in steel cases. The bars are [illegible] length, so as to permit [illegible] packed tightly in the cases [illegible] wound in the side, and [illegible] are in bags, irrespective [illegible] denomination, that hold just [illegible].

[illegible] load of a gold laden ship at [illegible] in the North river is no different [illegible] the precautions for the [illegible] are concerned, from that of [illegible] vessel. There are always [illegible] officials, city police and [illegible] detectives to meet each ship's [illegible] arrival of a boat with $10,000,000 [illegible] aboard will result in no [illegible] one or two extra men being [illegible] ride on the wagons carrying [illegible] away from the pier.

[illegible] boxes, with their precious [illegible] as they are carted down [illegible] ship to the wharfs might [illegible] appearance contain only ordinary [illegible]. If any unusual [illegible] be taken, however, it is [illegible] the brief moments that the [illegible] their millions are lying on [illegible] waiting to be lifted into the [illegible] and carted away. Then they [illegible] by a good many pairs of [illegible] not a stranger is allowed to [illegible] anywhere near them.

[illegible] act of the purchase of gold [illegible] times of panic and at critical [illegible]. In times of panic, when [illegible] for gold is so great that [illegible] is precious, its real value [illegible] during a situation comes only [illegible] is piled high on the counters [illegible] banks and trust companies [illegible] the demands of the creditors [illegible] institutions.

[illegible] that arrives in bars goes [illegible] the assay office. Before any [illegible] is ready to analyze it and assay [illegible] its real value the purchaser receives a certified check from the assayer [illegible] 99 per cent of the value supposed to be contained in the bars. The [illegible] can be converted into cash immediately [illegible] and the delay of two or [illegible] necessary to make a complete [illegible] of the shipment is avoided. [illegible] additional sum is due the [illegible] after the assayer's report is received [illegible] in a day or two.

[illegible] same process so far as ex[illegible] is concerned is gone through [illegible] with gold coins. They, instead of [illegible] the assay office, go direct to the [illegible] mint. Each bag is weighed [illegible] and if found to tip the [illegible] 500 ounces ($9,300) in cash is [illegible] advanced. That process [illegible] hours, for each bag has to [illegible] the coins assorted into their [illegible] denominations, counted and [illegible] for loss from abrasions. After [illegible] done the money is returned [illegible] containing $5,000 each, and the [illegible] the purchaser, whatever [illegible], is forwarded to him.

[illegible] other class of gold shipment [illegible] to be handled is that of for[illegible] coins. They are not even [illegible] are placed immediately in [illegible] melted and then sent to the [illegible], where they are treated as [illegible] gold bars. The extra time [illegible] to secure actual American [illegible] the gold coins of foreign nations [illegible] for the small [illegible] of gold imported in that form. [illegible] when shipping gold in coin or [illegible] is little difference. It is [illegible] the custom of the ships carrying about $200 in every shipment [illegible]. It is a fact, however, that [illegible] coins do lose considerably [illegible] in weight than the bars.—New [illegible].

FIRE AT COCHRAN, GA.

Loss Estimated at $10,000; Insurance $17,000.

Cochran, Ga., Dec. 16.—The department store of J. J. [illegible] destroyed at an early hour this morning, by fire.

The fire had gained considerable headway before discovered, and consumed the entire building. The entire stock of goods was completely destroyed. But for the heroic efforts of the volunteer fire department in getting control of the fire, the whole block in which this building is located would have been wiped out.

The furniture and fixtures in the offices on the second floor were also burned. This is one of the most disastrous fires in the history of the town.

The loss is estimated at $10,000, with insurance of $17,000.

Imprisonment in the Penitentiary.

Augusta, Ga., Dec. 16.—The judge of the city court, in passing sentence on Martin Kelly and Georgia Hall, who had pleaded guilty to the charge of gambling, declared the two sentences then pronounced to be the most he would impose without adding the penalty of imprisonment to the fine. He fined the two defendants $100 each, but declared that the next time he was called on to pass sentence in gambling cases he would make the fines heavier and add a term in the penitentiary or on the chaingang without the alternative.

Hunters Lose Their Lives.

New Orleans, La., Dec. 16.—Hawkins Norton, custom agent for the Illinois Central railroad, and W. Grima, a prominent young stock broker, both lost their lives in a similar manner Saturday while members of a hunting party at the Rainbow camp, 65 miles from New Orleans on the Louisville and Nashville railroad. Norton lost his life as a result of a gunshot wound in the side, and Grima was drowned by the overturning of a skiff. Both men were prominent in the business and social life of New Orleans.

Murderous Work of Robbers.

Kansas City, Mo., Dec. 16.—B. Sternberg, a grocer in Kansas City, Kans., was killed and his wife wounded by robbers who attacked them in their store Saturday night. It is believed that the robbers asked for a can of sardines and as the woman placed an open can before them one struck him down with an iron bar. The robbers then entered the living apartments back of the store and attacked Mrs. Sternberg with a meat cleaver. She cannot live. The robbers took $75 and escaped.

Dean Held for Robbery.

Macon, Ga., Dec. 16.—Fred Dean, a negro, who, according to P. F. Brown, a photographer, made an attempt to rob him over a week ago, has been captured by the police and is now held under charge of highway robbery. When Brown saw the negro Saturday he called upon Policeman Johnson to make the arrest and the negro was held. Brown stated that Dean tried to rob him in the same way and there were several strokes with a knife made to ward off the intended robbery.

Enforce Prohibition.

Augusta, Ga., Dec. 16.—Judge Emmett F. Eve, of the city court, has announced from the bench the inauguration of a vigorous campaign against violators and misdemeanors of all sorts, but particularly against all who violate the pending state prohibition law. It is the intention of Solicitor J. C. Black, Jr., of the city court, to docket test cases against the first liquor joint that opens in this county, and he expresses the belief that he will be able to secure convictions.

Major Barbot to Resign.

Augusta, Ga., Dec. 16.—Major D. Barbot has announced his intention of resigning his command of the third battalion (unassigned) National Guards of Georgia, to take effect immediately after inspection. The battalion has previously been a part of the Third regiment and Major Barbot has been in command for a long time. It is understood Major Barbot is slated for a position on the staff.

Negro Killed by Another.

Macon, Ga., Dec. 16.—Mike Hamlin, a negro, was mortally wounded Sunday by a negro friend on Monroe street while the two were playing with a revolver. The injured negro was shot through the body near the heart and expired soon after being taken to the city hospital. The police set to work at once to determine whether the shot was accidental or not.

Tulane Shoe Factory Burns.

New Orleans, La., Dec. 16.—An early Sunday morning fire destroyed the shoe factory, one of the largest in the south. The loss is $100,000. The fire spread to several buildings near the factory, but the occupants escaped with some of their valuables.

Seven Firemen Injured.

Saginaw, Mich., Dec. 16.—Seven firemen were injured, three of them perhaps fatally, in the burning of Hughes' produce and fruit store company's plant. The property loss will be $65,000.

G GOLD ABROAD

Employed in Its Purchase and Shipment.

COMPLEX TRANSACTION

The System by Which Foreign Gold Coin Arriving by Ship in New York Is Turned Into American Money—The Loss by Abrasion.

"$10,000,000 worth of gold in the Bank of England says the cashier of the subtreasury in New York, "or any couple of millions, is not worth buying a piece of work over. Whatever difference there is in value is in favor of the gold purchaser. It is pretty sure to get back all of your money.

"Most of the gold bought by the large banking houses of New York and other cities is purchased from the Bank of England or the Bank of France. Its purchase is arranged for by English or French agents of the banks that wishes to secure the gold. Payment for it will have to be paid down promptly upon the demand. In the event, when every dollar of gold that may be secured is being eagerly sought by bankers here, the price is as high as 5 and 6 per cent.

"The shipment of the gold is accomplished by comparatively few extra men. An extra detective or two from Scotland Yard, perhaps, and a few other private detectives employed by the Bank of England furnish the protection needed.

"Gold imported into this country comes in one of two forms. It is either in bars or in coin. If in coin it is usually American money that has been exported in some previous year, for the relatively small amount of foreign coin is brought here. Whether it be coin, however, it is all shipped in steel cases. The bars are of short length, so as to permit of being packed tightly in the cases. The coins are in bags, irrespective of denomination, that hold just $1,000.

"On the arrival of a gold laden ship at quarantine in the North river is no difficulty so far as precautions for the safety of the gold are concerned, from that of the vessel. There are always government officials, city police and private detectives to meet each ship, and the arrival of a boat with $10,000,000 in gold aboard will result in no more than one or two extra men being added to the police on the wagons carrying the gold away from the pier.

"The steel boxes, with their precious contents, as they are carted down to the ship to the wharfs might from their appearance contain only ordinary merchandise. If any unusual precautions be taken, however, it is only for the brief moments that the wagons with their millions are lying on the dock waiting to be lifted into the hold and carted away. Then they are followed by a good many pairs of eyes, and not a stranger is allowed to get anywhere near them.

"The usual act of the purchase of gold bullion in times of panic and at ordinary times. In times of panic, when the necessity for gold is so great that every moment is precious, its real value during a situation comes only to be piled high on the counters of the banks and trust companies to meet the demands of the creditors of the institutions.

"Gold that arrives in bars goes direct to the assay office. Before any payment is made to analyze it and ascertain its real value the purchaser receives a certified check from the assay office for 98 per cent of the value supposed to be contained in the bars. The bars must be converted into cash immediately, and the delay of two or three days necessary to make a complete assay of the shipment is avoided. The additional sum is due the purchaser after the assayer's report is received, usually in a day or two.

"The same process so far as exchanging gold is concerned is gone through with when gold coins. They, instead of going to the assay office, go direct to the subtreasury. Each bag is weighed when received, and if found to tip the scales at 500 ounces $9,300 in cash is immediately advanced. That process takes many hours, for each bag has to be opened, the coins assorted into their various denominations, counted and allowance for loss from abrasions. After this is done the money is returned to the purchaser, whatever amount it is, is forwarded to him.

"The other class of gold shipment to be handled is that of foreign coins. They are not even coins that are placed immediately in the melting pot and then sent to the mint, where they are treated as though they were gold bars. The extra time necessary to secure actual American value for the gold coins of foreign nations is the chief reason for the small amount of gold imported in that form. Between shipping gold in coin or bullion there is little difference. It is claimed that the motion of the ships causes a loss of about $300 in every shipment of $1,000. It is a fact, however, that foreign coins do lose considerably more in weight than the bars.—New York Sun.

MOTHER SHIPTON.

Some of Her Strange Prophecies That Have Realized.

"When Mother Shipton heard that King Henry VIII. should be king and Cardinal Wolsey should be at York she said that Cardinal Wolsey should never come to York, which the king and the cardinal hearing, being angry, sent the Duke of Suffolk and the Lord Leyny to her, who came with their men disguised to the king's house near York, whom, leaving their men, they went to Mr. Beasley in York and commanded him to go with them to Mother Shipton's house. When they came there they knocked at the door. She said, 'Come in, Mr. Beasley, and those honorable lords with you,' and Mr. Beasley would have put in the lords before him, but she said: 'Come in, Mr. Beasley. You know the way. They do not.'

"Then they went into the house where there was a great fire, and they drank and were very merry.

"'Mother Shipton,' said the duke, 'you said the cardinall should never see Yorke.'

"'Yes,' said she, 'I said he might see Yorke, yet never come to it.'

"'But,' said the duke, 'when he comes to Yorke thou shalt be burned.'

"'We shall see that,' said she, and, plucking her handkerchief off her head, she threw it into the fire, and it would not burn. Then she took it and put it on again. Then said the duke, 'What meanne you by this?'

"She replied, 'If this had burned, I might have burned.'

"'Mother Shipton,' quoth the duke, 'what do you think of me?'

"'Why, lord,' said she, 'the time will come when you will be as low as I am.' (The duke was afterward beheaded.)

"My Lord Piercy said, 'And what say you of me?'

"'My lord,' said she, 'shoo your horse in the quick and you shall doe well, but your body will be burned in Yorke pavement, and your head shall be stolen from the Barre and carried into France.' (This proved true, for he rose in rebellion in the north, and by not flying when he might he was taken and beheaded in Yorke, where his body was burned, and his head was stolen away and carried into France.)

"Not longe after came the cardinall to Cawood, and, going to the top of the Tower, he asked, 'Where stands Yorke?' and said that one said that he should never see Yorke. They shewed him Yorke and that he would soon be there; but, being sent for by the king, he died in his way to London at Leicester of a Leake."—Reo Bennett in Metropolitan Magazine.

THE TREE'S ROOTS.

Something About What Is Called Plant Intelligence.

As the animal is nearer to us than the vegetable, so is animal intelligence nearer akin to our own than plant intelligence. We hear of plant physiology, but not yet of plant psychology. When a plant growing in a darkened room leans toward the light the leaning, we are taught, is a purely mechanical process. The effect of the light upon the cells of the plant brings it about in a purely mechanical way, but when an animal is drawn to the light the process is a much more complex one and implies a nervous system. It is thought by some that the roots of a water loving plant divine the water from afar and run toward it. The truth is the plant or tree sends its roots in all directions, but those on the side of water find the ground moister in that direction and their growth is accelerated, while the others are checked by the dryness of the soil. An ash tree stands on a rocky slope where the soil is thin and poor twenty or twenty-five feet from my garden. After awhile it sent so many roots down into the garden and so robbed the garden vegetables of the fertilizers that we cut the roots off and dug a trench to keep the tree from sending more. Now, the gardener thought the tree divined the rich pasturage down below there and reached for it accordingly. The truth is, I suppose, that the roots on that side found a little more and better soil and so pushed on till they reached the garden, where they were at once so well fed that they multiplied and extended themselves rapidly. The tree waxed strong and every season sent more and stronger roots into the garden.—John Burroughs in Outing Magazine.

A Cruel Inscription.

A tombstone unearthed during the demolition of the old churchyard of Radnorshire bore a curiously unloving "In Memoriam." Here it is:

I plant these shrubs upon your grave,
dear wife,
That something on this spot may boast
of life.
Shrubs may wither and all earth must rot;
Shrubs may revive, but you, thank heaven, will not.

Beware of Frequent Colds.

A succession of colds or a protracted cold is almost certain to end in chronic catarrh, from which few persons ever wholly recover. Give every cold the attention it deserves and you may avoid this disagreeable disease. How can you cure a cold? Why not try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy? It is highly recommended. Mrs. J. White, of Butler, Tenn., says: "Several years ago I was bothered with my throat and lungs. Someone told me of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I began using it and it relieved me at once. Now my throat and lungs are sound and well." For sale by Upchurch Drug co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thorsby.

Old Auntie Mandy, who did the washing, was such a happy, heave old soul that, although she worked very hard early and late and must often have been weary, nothing could depress her. In everything that occurred she saw only "good luck" for herself. One day she brought home the washing in a high state of glee.

"Jes' think, Mis' Arnold," she said, "I'm goin' fer git married. Isn't dat jes' fine luck fo' poor, old black woman like me?"

"I shall be very sorry to lose you, Mandy," said Mrs. Arnold, "but I'm glad if your life will be easier."

"Lose me!" gasped Mandy. "Lor'! Mis' Arnold, I can't afford to let you lose me jes' now. Why, I'a goin' fer marry Br'er Johnson an' his five chillun. I'a got fer hustle now, fur sartin."

"But I fail to see where your good luck is coming in from such a marriage, Mandy."

When Goethe Dictated.

In Wilhelm Bode's "Studies With Goethe" an interesting chapter is made up from the recollections of his last secretary, Christian Schuchardt. Of Goethe's method when he dictated "Wilhelm Meister" Schuchardt says: "He dictated with a certainty and rapidity which made one fancy that he was reading from a printed book. If this had been done in quiet and without interruption, I would not have marveled so much. But while the work was proceeding there came the barber, the hairdresser—Goethe had his hair singed every other day and had it dressed daily—the library servant, often the former secretary, his clerk, all of whom had access to his study unannounced. Friends called, the barber gossiped, the librarian told about books newly received, some member of the family would enter and join in the conversation, and finally, when all was again quiet, I would read the last sentence, and the dictation would proceed as though there had been no interruption.

He Robbed the Thief.

From Czenstochowa, the Mecca of Polish pilgrims, comes an amazing story of coincidences. A pilgrim went to one of the priests and complained that some thief had stolen his purse while he was in church and asked for money. The priest replied that he had no money and that the best thing for the pilgrim to do was to try to find the thief.

"I shall go into the church and steal money from somebody else," said the pilgrim, "for I have nothing to go home with." He went into the church and, seeing a man in the crowd with a wallet on his back, slipped his hand into it and pulled out his own stolen purse, with the exact sum he had left in it. He was so glad to find his money that he hurried off to tell the priest, and the thief got away.—Warsaw Cor. Pall Mall Gazette.

Names of Dances.

The position taken by the dancers gives the name to the "quadrille"—literal English for "a little square" in the French tongue. From the French we get also "country dance," which, as a matter of fact, has no reference to rural frolics. "Contredanse," which has reference to the position of the couples, opposite each other, is readily corrupted into "country dance." The "polka" is a Polish dance, the name being derived from the Bohemian word "pulka," meaning half, and refers to the half step which occurs in this measure. The "waltz" is German—waltzen, meaning to revolve—the circular motion of the couples easily explaining the connection. The "reel" is suggestively obvious. "Jig" is of course from the French gigue.—Harper's Weekly.

Inside Light.

A number of butchers were conversing on what they had found in the stomachs of animals they had killed. After narrating several stories which could only be accepted by the credulous an old farmer sitting by declared that he had something to beat anything that had yet been told. The company asked for it. "Well," said the farmer, "I had a cow once, and I went out into the yard with a lantern to feed her, and I left the lantern in the yard and did not see it after that until the next day. When we killed the cow there was the lantern in her stomach and the light still burning."

The Castle Comedy

By Thompson Buchanan

This is a rattling good love story of merry old England at the close of the Napoleonic wars.

In the scene pictured here the wilful young lady is telling her father she doesn't intend to marry. She means she does not intend to marry the nobleman her father has selected.

The reason, as the reader soon discovers, is that she has fallen in love with a French dancing master. Out of this complication grows the story.

Even if Thompson Buchanan were not a Louisville boy and had not written himself into the affections of the Herald we would not hesitate in surrendering to his Castle Comedy the palm for absolute fascination.

—LOUISVILLE HERALD.

The Castle Comedy will be printed in this paper. Look for it.

A merry Christmas to one and all.

A TERRIBLE explosion in the mines at Yolande, occurred on Monday morning, and up to Tuesday night 61 dead bodies had been recovered.

According to Supt C. C. Huckabee the explosion occurred at 10:25 o'clock and was undoubtedly due to windy shots He had just made a tour of inspection and had congratulated some of the men on the condition of their rooms. A few minutes after reaching the top he saddled his horse and was about to go for a day's hunt, little thinking that the next few hours would be spent in a search for the blackened forms of those whose lives had been snatched by the explosion of coal dust.

Parties of miners from Abernant, Searles, Davis Creek and Brookwood are here ready and eager to do anything and everything looking toward the recovery of those who are still entombed. It will possibly be noon tomorrow before all of the unfortunate dead are recovered.

Yolande is located on the Birmingham Mineral 28 miles southwest of Birmingham, and is a camp which has excited the interest and admiration for years of the most competent operators in the district, on account of the manner in which it was opened and equipped. When the news of the disaster which shrouded the camp in sorrow was first sent out there were but few of the mining fraternity who were not surprised indeed. An Age-Herald man was on the scene at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon and found willing hands busy at the rescue of those who were still entombed, though but little hope was entertained that any would be brought out alive.

Tallapoosa farmers buy per year at least 1,000 mules at $200.00, or more. So, for these two items $400,000, or the value of 8,000 bales of cotton goes West, this is more than all the profit of all the cotton raised in Tallapoosa county, yet Tallapoosa could grow all her mules and meat and keep this money at home. This is not all; we buy from abroad meal for bread, potatoes for the table, hay for stock, fruit, vegetables and many things that wohld grow well in Tallapoosa. Is it any wonder that money is scarce? If the organizations trying to control the price of cotton were to control the home supplies it would be the greatest leverage to master the cotton problem.—Dadeville Courier.

Just so! A number of Chilton county people pass their money away through a Clanton agent, to Birmingham, and they wonder why there is no money in Chilton county.

A CASH OFFER.

The Banner has made a special clubbing rate with The Memphis Weekly Commercial Appeal by which we will furnish both papers for one year for the regular subscription price, $1.00. The Commercial Appeal is one of the largest and best papers in the South and we hope to receive many new subscriptions on this offer; $1.00 cash for both papers. Everyone should take their home paper first for the local news, and then a general weekly for the news of the world. These two papers make a strong combination. Both papers $1.00.

A Delicate Task.

"The newspapers," said the orator solemnly, "do not tell the truth."

"Perhaps not," answered the editor regretfully. "We do our best; but, you know, there is nothing more difficult than to tell the truth in a way that won't put it up to some one to challenge your veracity."—Washington Star.

In these days of time and stress it is well to be acquainted with sound financial institutions, among the first of which is to be reckoned the First National Bank of Montgomery, a picture of whose magnificent building we present above.

Editor Banner—Please allow me space in your paper to say a few words as I see nothing much from over the country, it seems that the people are down and out some way or other as they are not saying very much through the papers now, I like to read letters from all over the country, so let them come, good or bad, I guess the first frost killed "Pea Vines," I haven't heard anything of him since the first frost, come again Pea Vines, if you are not killed down. We are fixing to put up a telephone from Coopers to Clanton, I guess there are some who can't talk enough in the run of the day, they want to talk at night.

Mr. W. O. Logan has moved back to his house one and one-half miles south of Clanton and has about finished ceiling and fixed for the winter, he is also having it painted, W. L. Powel, doing the painting and when completed, will be nicest house near town. We feel sure that we are going to have a nice Christmas for we got a good price for our cotton this time and most of us have some money to buy Xmas and that is all good too so we are not going to get drunk if drunk don't get us.

A SPIRIT WARNING

Harry Hobart and his pretty sister Dorothy were almost inseparable. They were orphans. Their parents died when they were too young to remember them. Brought up by an aunt, they led happy, uneventful lives until they had reached manhood and womanhood. With youth, health and riches, their future seemed without a cloud. Harry was not twenty-one. Dorothy two years younger.

In far off Singapore the Hobarts had an uncle. He was a banker and was in business there. They received a letter saying: "I am alone in the world. I would like to have my brother's children with me. You, Harry, have attained man's estate. If your aunt approves I will take you as partner in my business. Dorothy can be queen of our household. You shall be as my own, and when I leave this world all I have shall be yours."

Harry had often expressed a wish to see a little more of life than could be seen in the small suburban town where they now lived, and on receipt of their Uncle John's letter he was eager to leave Boston and sail for India.

Dorothy begged and pleaded in vain for him to change his mind. In spite of his deep affection for her, her brother was wild to get a glimpse of foreign lands. "Go with me, sister," said Harry. "Uncle John wants you, and Aunt Lucy can live here with the servants while we are away."

But the affectionate girl would not leave her old aunt, who had been a mother to her. It almost broke the heart of the loving sister, this parting, but her duty, she said, was with her aunt.

The day before Harry left he sat with his sister in the library talking of the future. "I will stay one year without you, Dolly. Then you must either come to me or I to you. And remember this, if any thing happens to me, if I never return and death overtakes me, I shall watch over you, my dear one, and in some way warn you if danger is near."

Six months passed.

The two lonely women had received many long letters from the absent one. He was well and happy; "would be perfectly contented if only my Dolly were with me."

About this time the fair Dorothy had two suitors for her hand. One was an Englishman, a man of fine appearance, some twenty years older than the young lady, but graceful and fascinating and of great wealth. The other gentleman was young, fair, with an honest, open countenance, but poor, an artist almost unknown to fame.

The girl favored young Arthur Allen. Her aunt urged her to accept the older man. Times were hard, money scarce. Many large bank robberies occurred. The robbers were experts and escaped detection. Wealthy mansions were invaded and jewels stolen.

One evening Dorothy was returning home from the city. She had been to her bankers to get a diamond necklace she wanted to wear at a reception. All her valuables were in Mr. Bassett's safe. Darkness had come on before she was aware. The road was lonely. Suddenly a soft light above her head attracted her. The sky was filled with storm clouds. The light was clear. A faint outline of a hand appeared, pointing toward a thick clump of trees. For a moment the girl was bewildered. Then, hearing oaths and footsteps approaching, she rushed in terror toward the friendly thicket.

"Where is she?" cried a deep voice. "The bird has flown, and we have lost the diamonds. I wish I could find her. I would make that dainty throat bleed."

Almost fainting, the poor child reached home at last.

"Aunt Lucy, Harry is dead!" cried she as she sank into a chair. "I have had a warning."

She related her narrow escape and the strange warning of danger received.

A few weeks after came a black bordered letter telling of the death of her dear brother.

Three years passed. Many changes had come to sweet Dorothy Hobart. She was alone in the world. Aunt Lucy and Uncle John were sleeping their last sleep. Young Allen was in Italy pursuing his studies. Dorothy had promised her aunt that she would marry Mr. Elsworth, the Englishman. "He will be a kind, good husband. Promise me you will accept him. I can then die content." So the girl, against her will, became betrothed.

The day before the wedding Dorothy sat in the library alone. Tears were in the pretty blue eyes. She was thinking of her brother and also of the absent artist lover, for she had given her heart to him while promising her hand to another. On a sudden a faint, soft light shone near her, and again the shadowy hand appeared. The light glowed, and the hand pointed to a folded paper near.

Dorothy, pale and frightened, glanced at the letter. It warned her not to marry Mr. Elsworth. He was suspected and was being watched by detectives. The letter was unsigned. On her wedding day the poor girl was ill with a fever.

When a month later Dorothy arose, pale and hollow eyed, from her sickbed, Elsworth was convicted of robbery and murder. He it was who, with an accomplice, tried to steal the diamond necklace. He wanted the heiress for her money.

Dorothy went abroad, met her former lover in Paris and was united to him. Her brother's spirit rested in peace.

Wonny's Delight.

Mrs. Benham—I had a perfectly delightful time today.

Benham—Whose funeral was it?—Puck.

Home Echo.

Editor Banner—Please allow me space in the dear old Banner to say a few words. Health of this community is very good. Our Sunday school is doing fairly well, with good attendance, and may it continue to grow and flourish as a tree planted by the waters (Jer. 17-18) that it may continue to bear fruit and thereby accomplish much for the Master (Mat. 7-17).

Well, as the liquor question seems to be an event before the people for consideration and discussion, I cannot in justice to myself, pass an opportunity for saying something, but it seems to me that there has already been enough said against the use of whiskey to convince the fair minded that it is out of place in our beautiful land, and causes more blighted homes, sad hearts and more trouble than any other one thing that can be mentioned. There are boys, not only in this land, but in every land where whiskey abounds, that will actually save their bottle of sour sorghum juice a month in order to display its contents at some gathering. Now, isn't this a fact? Seeing is believing, then when we see all this going on and sit with our mouths shut I think we are just about as contrary as the fellow's sow. This gentleman owned a sow and he said that she was actually so contrary that when he fed his hogs he had to catch her by the ears and drag her up to the trough, but when he got her there she was so blamed contrary that he had to take he had to take her by the tail and drag her away Now, there are a lot of people opposed to whiskey, but they are just like the fellow's sow; will stay back and wait for the rest to go to the front and then, as the sow, then they will want to stay with us and partake of the good we have accomplished. Let us all speak. Hurrah for Sam R. Billingsley, for I think he is on the right track. Now, for the Country Gent who said that he got more singing than dinner at Mount Nebo church. Well, bud if you just came after singing, I'm glad to know that you was not disappointed, for as I have before tried to impress upon the minds of the people, we did not call for the singing, if we had then you would have got your dinner. There is a maxium that fools prepare a feast and the wise eat them. You seem to think that I was striking at you but I had no reference to you whatever, but if the cap fits you will just have to wear it. Of course, you did not come for your dinner, as you have before told us, but 'tis said that a hit dog always hollows, so if for this reason you raised your yell, you had better be as mindful of your basket as you are of your song book, and probably you will have dinner to go with your singing. Mt. Nebo has always been noted for its bounteous dinners. Hope you will remember childrens' day and many other events favored by and in harmony with the people, for it was an occasion which reminded me of the loaves and fishes. Best wishes to the Banner and its readers.

"We Walk On Shoes, So Can You"

The Family Shoe Store

That is what we are. One reason is because in the "OUR FAMILY" line of "STAR BRAND" shoes we have a shoe for every member of every family. Think what it means to have all your family shod economically in well-made, well-fitting and service-giving shoes. "OUR FAMILY" shoes are made by experts in big specialty factories from soft, pliant, good wearing, box calf leather.

The men's and boys' are Goodyear Welts which means that the soles are flexible and that there are no tacks, wax or threads inside to hurt, burn and blister the feet. Being reinforced under the instep with a brass clinch fastening, they cannot rip.

Prices are reasonable—Men's $3.00 to $3.50, Boys' $2.50 to $2.75, Youths' $2.25 to $2.50, Little Gents' $2.00.

The women's, misses' and children's shoes have a metal clinch sole retainer; the soles can't pull apart.

"OUR FAMILY" shoes for Women are $1.75 to $2.00, Misses' 12 to 2, $1.50 to $1.65, Children's 8½ to 11½, $1.35 to $1.50, 5 to 8, $1.10 to $1.25.

The star on the heel and the name "OUR FAMILY" on the sole of each shoe is a guarantee that they are honestly constructed and full of satisfaction.

Editor Banner—Here I come again for another little chat with the readers of the dear old Banner.

Health of our community is not very good at present as nearly every body has a bad cold. We are very sorry to say that Mrs. Roberts has been very ill. The goober parching at Mr. Ed McCollough's was enjoyed by a large crowd. Miss Logan and Misses Della and Ella and Mr. Raymond West visited their chum, Arra Chandler Saturday and all reported a grand time.

How are Xmas cakes with you all; mama has cooked three. By the way, girls do you think your beaus love you any better than they use to, it is hard to tell but cheer up and don't get out of heart, for it is always best to keep your heart, aren't you sorry for that poor little fellow that signs this name "one alone," it is terrible that as many pretty girls as there are and he can't find one among them to suit him, I know he is handsome or he couldn't write such charming letters so come again one alone. Mrs. Mattie Chandler, son and daughter visited Mrs. Logan and daughter Saturday.

We wish Mr and Mrs. Lonnie Keen a long and happy life. We are sorry to say that one of our dear girls, Miss Lola Ousley has gone to Mississippi, we truly hope she will enjoy her trip.

Misses Ella and Arra Chandler will spend Xmas near Fletcher, we wish them a happy Xmas, they will return to Selma on the following Sunday. Boys don't steal too many eggs for they are liable to be missed. Pink bonnets are stylish for Xmas, so all you girls get one. We hope the Xmas tree at Pilgrim's Rest will be a success, we wish the school teacher and scholars of that place a merry Xmas and a happy New Year. The boy that wears the brown hat went up the hill as usual Sunday eve. Girls, keep on the watch-out there is going to be another party farther down the road sometime soon and then we can catch us a beau. The girls of this place had a fine time on the hill Sunday, I mean those that have no beaus. I wish you all a merry Xmas and a happy New Year and if this escapes the waste basket I will call again so bye bye and best wishes to the Banner and its readers.

Breaking the Heart.

The matrimonial failure of Pat, a bricklayer in the center of the city, has been common knowledge for some time, and it has also been no secret that Pat really does not blame his wife for her impatience with his habits. Pat is in dead earnest when he says that his wife really is too good for him and deserves a divorce, which he will obtain. Pat would gladly grant her it it wasn't so expensive. The good faith of Pat in this request was, however, never more forcibly illustrated than during the course of a conversation there which he had just overheard. "Pat, the doctors say you are very sick," said his wife during her visit to the hospital one day. "What do they really say? You can't hurt me by telling the truth," answered Pat. "Well, Pat, they say that you cannot live," whispered the wife, thinly disguising to Pat's keenest interest the truth. "Don't you believe it, Madam, make a habit of holding out hopes to the last," deported Pat in his characteristic style. "They are only breaking the news to you gently. I am going to get well."—Philadelphia Record.

Maiden Insurance.

The Maiden Insurance company is a singular Denmark institution. It is confined to the nobility, and the nobleman, as soon as a female child is born to him, enrolls her name on the company's books and pays in a certain sum and thereafter a fixed annual amount to the treasury. When the young girl has reached the age of twenty-one she is entitled to a fixed income and to an elegant suit of apartments, and this income and this residence, both almost princely, are hers until she either marries or dies. The society has existed for generations. It has always prospered. Thanks to it, poverty stricken old maids are unknown among the Denmark nobility, but every maiden lady is rich and happy.

Not Responsible.

"Hold on," said the learned chemist. "Didn't I give you a bottle of my wonderful tonic that would make you look twenty years younger?"

"Yes did," replied the patient, "and I took it all. I was then thirty-nine, and now I am only nineteen."

"Well, then, why you please settle this bill you owe me for the treatment?"

"Oh, no! As I am only nineteen now, I am a minor, and cannot rightly be responsible for the bills they make. Good day, sir."—Illustrated Bits.

The Best Cook.

"Tommy, did you give your brother the best part of the lunch, as I told you to?"

"Reckon, I gave him the most. He can plant them and have a whole orchard."

Wifely Care.

"I never'll kill this any one," said the unsuccessful cook.

"Oh, yes, you have, dear," said his wife encouragingly, "with the first letter."—Life.

Didn't Know It Could Be Done.

"I didn't see you in church Sunday morning," said Mrs. Oldcastle.

"No," replied her husband, busy with her $2,000 solitaire, "I was so nervous I knew I couldn't sit still if I went so I gave up and laid in bed nearly the whole morning."

"What was the text?"

"Text? Why, I don't know. You ought to have been there. Dr. Mapperwell's ... contained several of our leading ... and considerable space was ... by some of them."

"Indeed! I didn't know they ... so much things in our church. I ... only the pews had that power."—Chicago Tribune.

"What were the best ale cellars you were in New York?" inquired the London literary expert of his portly neighbor.

By THOMPSON BUCHANAN

Quiet his daily calm, Tuffi angrily:

"Because, being an otter, to gratify my father's heart's desire and save him from disappointment I would even marry you, John Wilmerding, though I did not love you."

Duharre, skulking beside the tree, smiled quickly and drew in a long breath. For an instant Sir John was silenced.

"I presume, then, that now you do love some one," he said at last bitterly. That was a home thrust.

"Do you?" the girl answered and raised her chin very high, but her cheeks were flaming. The discarded lover saw the red signals, and instantly his fierce jealousy swept him into rage.

"Yes, said I came here to have a settlement with you about that very thing, and I will have it," he cried.

Mistress Percy stiffened.

"What do you mean?"

Rage blinded, Sir John swept on. "And I'd have had it last night but for Thorncliffe."

At the words Duharre started suddenly, then stopped as quickly and slipped the lock of the bench to hold himself behind the tree.

"Sir John Wilmerding," the girl cried, "my father shall"— But the man had swept too far past the point of reason to heed her warning.

"Yes, he shall know it, though 'twill break his proud heart. You'll beg in vain for an honest name then. Sir Henry will be proud—all will be proud of you—a Percy, with a lowborn lover."

May Percy suddenly became white like death, then burning rage and shame made her face like fire. Her eyes opened wide, her nostrils dilated. She trembled and could not speak.

The blood was all gone from under Duharre's nails, and he held to the bench to keep himself from starting forward. Now the girl came close to Sir John.

"Do you presume, sir?" she almost whispered, so low and fierce the tone.

"I don't presume," he cried. "I know, for I saw you in his room last night—the room of that lowborn French jig stepper."

From the jig stepper, standing just out of sight beside the bench, came a low gasp of agony. He let go his hold, then quickly slipped out of his coat, dropping the garment upon the bench and laying his hat upon it. Next he rolled up the right sleeve of his shirt above the elbow and stood upright again beside the tree, waiting—friendly waiting.

May Percy was sneering now. "A brave lover, truly, to doubt the honor of his affianced wife!" Then her anger blazed out once more beyond all bounds. "Now, I'll never marry you—no, never! Never."

The tense listener behind the tree gave a great, heaving sigh of joy. That, last made it all worth while to him.

"You say well," sneered Sir John in turn. "Doubtless you thought it a great joke to hide in his clock. I hope you confined your explorations of his apartment to the interior of the clock."

"Coward!" the girl cried, very white. An avenging shadow flashed from the shrouding tree, like lightning. Straight as a bolt it went. In three leaps Duharre had reached his victim. May Percy gave a startled little scream. Wilmerding glanced that way. He turned in time to meet the Frenchman's blazing eyes—in time to catch the slashing, open handed blow that sent the blood tingling to his cheeks.

"Quick! Liar! Traducer of women, fight quickly, that I may kill before the sun stops to shine for shame of you!"

The words, rushing from Duharre's lips, came tumbling, almost telescoping one another.

Sir John sprang back, red, angry and laid his hand on his sword. With accustomed gesture the Frenchman reached for his own, only to find himself unarmed. Then he cried again:

"Quick! Quick! Give me a sword, I say!"

Wilmerding dropped his hand from the hilt with a sneering laugh. "Do you think I'd fight you, you renegade, you lowborn French mountebank?"

Duharre was calmer now. "From knowing how I shall dance the mirror at your burial, monsieur," he retorted.

"A sword, forsooth!" sneered Sir John. "I'll give you a rope, and the boys boys shall lay it on your back!"

The Frenchman sprang toward him. "Would you have me strangle you like a dog that is choked?"

The Englishman whipped out his weapon. "A step nearer and I'll kill you as one." Then, returning his sword to his scabbard, he changed his tone. "I forgot I was dealing with a servant. Here!" He drew some silver from his pocket and threw it toward Duharre. "Take this, my man, and forget your spleen."

"For shame!" For shame!" burst impulsively from May Percy's lips. "If you are a man, Sir John—an Englishman—give him a sword and fight."

For the first time Duharre took significant notice of her.

"Thank you, mademoiselle," he said. Then as the others stood there Captain Thorncliffe and Mistress Cartwright appeared coming along the path from the

you. Are you afraid to die? Come, throw away your sword and fight without it. I'll promise not to kill you."

Stung at last to anger, Wilmerding sprang at him, then paused. Duharre stood unmoved.

"Possibly monsieur is afraid of the disgrace of being beaten by a dancing master. If so, I'll fight you secretly."

"You'll fight the stocks in public," roared Sir John.

"Coward!" muttered May Percy. And then in a struggling rush the others came along the garden path.

"Too base to retract, a lie—too cowardly to fight! Mon Dieu—an English gentleman!" exclaimed Duharre in absolute disgust as he turned to meet the rest. "Come—come all!" he cried. "Yes, come to see a Frenchman punish a craven."

"What's this?" exclaimed Sir Henry Percy. Sir John answered him.

"Your French pet's crazy. I hinted that he could not dance divinely."

The English chorus came in strong at that. "Don't mind him, Sir John!" "Give him to the grooms!" "Let him cool his blood in the duck pond!" "Match your man 'gainst his single sticks. 'Twould be great sport!"

The bullet one was in despair. "If I were a gentleman!" he muttered.

Wilmerding heard.

"Then I'd kill you like one. I fight my peers."

A look of supreme resolve sprang in Duharre's eyes.

"Monsieur fights his peers!" The tone rang clamorous joy. With a panther-like spring the Frenchman was beside Captain Thorncliffe. An instant, and he had wrenched out the captain's sword and was back before Sir John. The rest looked on, amazed. The men did moved almost too quick for wits to follow, let alone hands to stop him. Now he saluted his enemy. It was the courtly salute of a French officer.

"If English gentlemen must fight when the poor dominate it!" cried the dancing master.

In laughing delight he continued: "Monsieur has asked the hand of a Percy in marriage. The Percys are officially's peers. Only last night myself and three gentlemen here heard monsieur wish that he might have 'French Percy' at his sword point. Monsieur shall have that wish." He

To the People of Clanton.

All persons in Clanton who have chronic coughs or colds, bronchitis, weak lungs, sore throat, asthma, weak throat, sore chest, hoarseness, stomach and liver troubles or any form of chronic cough or cold, I am willing to risk them the test and favor of prescription, Vinol, and assure their money if it fails to benefit.

The reason Vinol is so successful in curing colds and coughs enough common it contains in addition to cod liver all the medicinal elements of cod liver oil actually taken from fresh cods livers, but without oil or grease to upset the stomach and retard its work.

Unlike old-fashioned cod liver oil and emulsions, it is delightful palatable, agreeable to the weakest stomach, therefore, unequaled as a strength creator and tonic reconstructor.

A member of the Upchurch Drug Co. says: "It is because we know so well of what Vinol is made that we ask every run-down, nervous, debilitated aged or weak person in Clanton, and every person suffering from stubborn colds, hanging-on coughs, bronchitis or incipient consumption to try Vinol on our guarantee." Good Cough Medicine for Children.

The season for coughs and colds is now at hand and too much care cannot be used to protect the children. A child is much more likely to contract diphtheria or scarlet fever when he has a cold. The quicker you cure his cold the less the risk. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the sole reliance of many mothers, as few of those who have tried it are willing to use any other. Mrs. F. F. Stalcher of Ripley, W. Va., says: "I have never used anything other than Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for my children and it has always given good satisfaction." This remedy contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given as confidently to a child as to an adult. For sale by Upchurch Drug co., Clanton; A. Horn, Throsby.

Telltale Bibles.

A dealer in secondhand books advertised the other day for old Bibles belonging to three families that have lately come into prominence.

"Do they want them as heirlooms?" asked a customer who had read the advertisement.

"Not a bit of it," said the dealer. "They want the Bibles because they contain a record of births; consequently they reveal ages—women's ages, presumably. Very often dealers in old books are asked to look up inconvenient documentary evidence of that kind. Before days of affluence the family Bibles get lost in the shuffle of moving around. Nobody thought much about the less than, but with the advent of prosperity the books could easily become a source of mortification to many women if they happened to fall into the hands of malicious persons; hence the frantic attempts to gather all such records into the family."—New York Post.

A Real Wonderland.

South Dakota with its rich silver mines, bonanza farms, wide range and strange natural formations, is a veritable wonderland. At Mound city, in the home of Mrs. E. T. Clapp a wonderful case of healing has lately occurred. Her son nearly met death with lung and throat trouble. "A exhausting coughing spells occurred every five minutes," writes Mrs. Clapp, "when I began giving Dr. King's New Discovery, the great medicine, that saved his life and completely cured him." FROSTED ENSILAGE.

Feeding Experiment Proves Food Value of Corn Little If Any.

In view of the difference of opinion existing between us as to whether corn is seriously damaged for silage making by freezing the Vermont experiment station undertook experiments in which different sections of the same field of corn were ensiled in matured condition and after different degrees of freezing.

A little more than half of it was cut into the silo on Oct. 7, immature and just barely touched by an extremely light frost. A hard frost occurred that night, but did not severe. Indeed, the first hard frost was delayed two weeks, occurring on the night of Oct. 21. Half of the remainder was cut on that date prior to the frost, mature, ears glazed; the remainder two days later, on Monday, mature, ears glazed, hard frosted or even frozen, with leaves badly whitened.

Tests in Feeding.

The feeding value of the different lots of silage was determined by feeding experiments with twenty-one milk cows for from fifteen to twenty-five weeks. It was found that, first, in every case more dry matter was eaten when the mature silage ration was fed, as was to have been expected; second, the quality of the milk made when the silage from the frozen corn was fed was depressed slightly; third, the total solid and fat yields were slightly depressed when the ration containing the frozen corn silage was fed, and, fourth, the products per unit of consumption were depressed when the more mature silages were fed, owing to the greater consumption, but smaller production.

Outcome of the Experiments.

The general outcome of the experiments, therefore, was that "the effect of frosting corn, and yet more of freezing it, appears very slightly to have been to depress its feeding value when made into silage."

In view, however, of the fact that from 6 to 15 per cent more total dry matter was harvested as a result of the two weeks' longer growth of the crop and in view of the presumption that the proportion of digestible dry matter was similarly augmented a 1 per cent depression resulting from the feeding of frozen silage is a negligible quantity. No ill result on the butter product was observed. It is reported that silage made from frozen corn keeps well in a good silo. It would appear, therefore, that the testimony of this trial is, on the whole, in favor of running frost risks to gain a greater maturation.

Winter Work on Farms.

One of the greatest needs on the average southern farm nowadays is more work in winter. Ever since I could remember it has seemed to me that life on the common Georgia farm is too much of a happy-go-lucky style. To get results in anything one has to keep everlastingly at it, so to speak. For years I have heard staid old farmers discussing fall plowing and spring plowing, but I have seen too little of it in actual observation, writes J. C. M. in the Southern Cultivator.

There used to be an idea, which is still prevalent, concerning results from fall and winter plowing. Some argued it was injurious to plow deep in the fall, others that it was absurd to plow in the springtime to any great depth. The truth of the matter is that good plowing at any time when the soil is in good condition is a good thing to do. Usually in the spring the subsoil is too wet to plow, and when it is turned up or broken in this condition damaging results are likely to occur.

Sugar and Rice.

In 1906 the farmers grew sugar beets enough to make 483,000 tons of beet sugar, which, with the 272,000 tons of cane sugar made in Louisiana and Texas, is enough to supply the entire population west of the Mississippi river and something over. In 1906 we grew 800,000,000 pounds of rice, substantially enough to supply home demand. It is the farmer's privilege to grow everything the people need that our soils will produce.—Secretary Wilson.

Hanging a Hog.

A hog hanger which does away with the necessity of calling the whole family out to hang up a hog is shown in the cut, says a writer in the Farm Press. It is made of two pieces of 2 by 4, ten feet long each, and one piece of 2 by 4, twelve feet long, for a brace to hold the frame upright. This brace is made longer than the legs to reach back out of the way. There is a crosspiece to four feet apart. There are two hold the bottoms hooks three and a half feet from the top to hold the hog without a gambrel stick. If gambrels are used, the frame will hold two hogs if they are not too heavy. To use the frame lay it across the table with the tongue outstretched, hook the hog fast and raise by moving the tongue forward. It raises easily because the table holds the weight of the head and shoulders until the frame is partly up. The frame may be easily moved back from the table by lifting one foot at a time. With the frame one man can hang up a hog weighing 300 pounds.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson XII.—Fourth Quarter, For Dec. 22, 1907.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. ii, 1-12, and I Sam. vii, 1-13—Memory Verses, 10-12 and 12, 13—Golden Texts, Luke ii, 11, and I Sam. vii, 3—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

(Copyright, 1907, by American Press Association.)

Unwilling to omit either the Christmas lesson, or the one on Samuel, we will give a portion to each, taking the Christmas story first, and it may be that we shall find more connection between them than appears probable at first sight. They both refer to Israel and to rulers in Israel, and in both there is the work of an enemy and deliverance therefrom.

It is high time that all teachers everywhere should very strongly emphasize the fact that the wonderful babe in Bethlehem was born "King of the Jews" and that it was predicted of Him that He should rule (or feed or shepherd) God's people Israel (Matt. ii, 2, 6; Mic. v, 2). Gabriel told Mary that her Son should occupy the throne of His father David and reign over the house of Jacob forever and that of His kingdom there should be no end (Luke i, 32, 33), and this was in perfect accord with Isa. ix, 6, 7; Jer. xxiii, 5, 6, and all prophecy. The time of the long postponed kingdom is ever drawing nearer, and every prophecy concerning Israel shall be literally fulfilled. Let the Christmas mottoes this year be on these lines: "All Israel shall be saved," "There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer," "Upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom," "He shall be ruler in Israel," "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews" (Rom. xi, 26; Isa. ix, 7; Mic. v, 2; John xix, 19). In connection with the story of the wise men and their gifts, tell of the queen of Sheba and her gifts, then show from Isa. lx and lxii and Zech. xiv that all nations shall yet bring gifts to Israel and go up from year to year to worship the king at Jerusalem; show how the effort of Herod, the earthly king, to destroy the child King will be matched and far overreached by the fulfillment of Rev. xvii, 14; xix, 19, 21, but the Lamb shall overcome them, for he is Lord of lords and King of kings. See God's care of the child Jesus by dreams given to the wise men and to Joseph and take comfort from the precious truth that if we are in Christ His Father is our Father and we are kept and cared for moment by moment (Isa. xxvii, 3). Let the gifts of the wise men lead us to ask ourselves by what gifts or devotion or self denial or journeyings we are proving our love to Him, who, though He was rich, for our sakes became poor that we through His poverty might be rich (II Cor. viii, 9). What is it to us that we have heard the wondrous story of the great redemption and so many millions whom He also loves have never heard? Let all gifts be to Him, to help make Him known, and not to those who do not need them.

Turning to the lesson in Samuel, the heart of it seems to be, "Return unto the Lord with all your hearts, put away the strange gods and prepare your hearts unto the Lord to serve Him only (verse 3). The people had relied upon the ark of the covenant and not upon the Lord and had lost the ark in battle. The Philistines found that the ark brought them more trouble than they wanted, so they returned it on a new cart drawn by two milk cows, which, contrary to nature, went away from their calves, which were shut up at home. The Philistines sent a golden offering, with the ark in a coffer by the side thereof. Without human guide or driver the cows took the cart to Bethshemesh and stopped in the field of a man called Joshua. The cart was used for firewood and the cows sacrificed as a burnt offering unto the Lord upon a great stone by which they had stopped with the cart. The lid of the ark, the mercy seat, was never to be removed but by the Lord's command, yet the men of Bethshemesh dared to disobey, and over 50,000 were slain. The law can only kill. Life comes by the mercy seat and the blood sprinkled upon it.

The men of Kirjathjearim were sent for, and they brought up the ark and put it in the house of Abinadab in the hill, setting apart Eleazar, his son, to keep it, and it abode there twenty years (verses 1, 2), the tabernacle being still at Shiloh, from whence Israel had taken the ark to battle.

The Philistines were still oppressing Israel, but Israel was crying unto the Lord, as Samuel pictured them to Shiloh, and they had a time of confession and fasting and prayer and pouring out their hearts before God, as a symbol of which they poured out water, perhaps saying, as on another occasion, "We are as water spilt on the ground which cannot be gathered up again" (II Sam. xiv, 14). While thus engaged the Philistines came against them, but Samuel offered a lamb for a burnt offering and cried unto the Lord, and the Lord heard him, and He thundered so mightily upon the Philistines that they were discomfited and smitten before Israel. Thus the Lord again fought for Israel as He had done so often and will again in days to come (Zech. xiv). Thunder is in Job xxxvii, 1-5, called the voice of God. "God thundereth marvelously with His voice; great things doeth He which we cannot comprehend." Some will find comfort in this passage from the fact that He directeth the lightning. All things are under His control, and He is a wall of fire round about His people (Zech. ii, 5).

Thoughts.

Mrs. Gossip—My husband is such a disagreeable man! He always goes down into the basement whenever he smells fire. Mrs. Shay—And has the smoke never appeared from the dining room chimney for dumb waiter, Mrs. Gossip—Yes, but that's because he is absentminded, poor man! That has nothing to do with his disagreeableness, you know.—Boston Transcript.

Hot Food Injurious.

Food should not be eaten too hot. A high temperature injures the mucous lining of the digestive tract and also causes a flow of perspiration, which renders the skin susceptible to chills and colds. Very hot food also increases a desire for liquids, so that one bad habit leads to another.

Passed the Limit.

"I purchased these shoes here last month, and I want to get them exchanged," began the man in the department store. "You'll notice that the patent leather has cracked."

"Oh, yes," exclaimed the clerk when he had examined the shoes. "They are old stock. The patent has probably expired."—Harper's Weekly.

Makes the Liver Lively

Foley's Orino Laxative gives permanent relief in cases of habitual constipation as it stimulates the liver and restores the natural action of the bowels without irritating these organs like pills or ordinary cathartics. A very peremptory letter was the result, but Mr. Labouchere guessed the nature of the message and recognized the writing, so he did not open the envelope, but placed it in the left pocket of his coat. Then he set off for a little holiday at Baden-Baden, and when he had been there for a week or so he opened the letter.

"Now," he remarked to a friend, "you can appreciate my foresight in placing Hammond's letter in my tail pocket, for I shall write him as follows:

"'My lord, I have just read your letter, which followed me to Baden-Baden.'"

This explanation of the delay was regarded as wholly satisfactory by Lord Hammond, who until he received it had been disposed to be very wroth with his dilatory assistant.

Words You Write, but Never Say.

There are words you never say, but often write, says the London Chronicle. And the contrast between French and English struck this writer when listening to a French "laboring man" who made a speech in literary French, for the public speaker in France has no difficulties in the matter of words, even though he evince his southern origin in slight differences of pronunciation. The language of the platform and of the press is one, but not, alas, in England. One could make quite a long list of words that are common enough in print, but fairly beat the man who thinks he is going to say them on a platform. For example, "succinct" is a common word in print, but the man who looks to fluent speech would boggle at it. In fact, no one even speaks the word. And, though Brobdingnagian is familiar enough in black and white, has even Lord Rosebery ventured on its vocal production? We don't say these things, as the lady said.

Not Greedy, But—

A well known cricket club in England in the neighborhood of Bury was playing its last match of the season on its own ground. The visitors batted first, and the home team's one and only professional, who was a good all round man, captured seven wickets for a few runs, thereby assuring himself of the bowling prize for the season. The batting prize, however, was still an open question, and during the interval between the innings the "pro" was busily engaged in helping to roll the pitch. A spectator, observing this, remarked to one of the home players:

"Tom's working hard today, isn't he?"

"Aye," replied the other, with a touch of sarcasm. "Tom's not greedy, but he likes a lot. He's got t' bowling prize, he gets paid for his services an' I can seb he means to collar t' battin' prize. I expect he'll be pinchin' t' bloomin' pavilion next."—London Express.

Waiters Tipping Waiters.

"Did you ever see one set of waiters serve a meal to another set?" asked the gray headed man. "I did. I happened to be eating in the rear end of a restaurant the other day when there came a shift of men. A dozen of them sat down at nearby tables, and the others waited on them. When they had finished eating every last waiter tipped the fellow who had served him. I thought at the time it was a hint for us three or four old duffers who happened to be munching away there to follow suit, but I learned later that it is customary among waiters. Of course each gets his money back in time, because they all tip one another, but the practice shows how sacredly waiters as a class regard the institution of tipping."—New York Sun.

A Medal.

A witty professional man was chatting with some women about a friend of theirs who was notoriously henpecked. His better half makes him walk a chalked line, and woe be unto him if he deviates from it.

"He is a model husband!" exclaimed one woman in the party.

"Nay, not model, but modeled," interrupted the professional man, "but whether in clay or putty deponent sayeth not."

Flattery.

Flattery pleases very generally. In the first place, the flatterer may think what he says to be true, but in the second place, whether he thinks so or not, he certainly thinks those whom he flatters of consequence enough to be flattered.—Johnson.

Busy Mi

Abraham Brown, of Winterton, N. Y., had a very remarkable experience; he says: "Doctors have got badly mixed up over me; one said heart disease; two called it kidney trouble; the fourth blood poison; and the fifth stomach and liver trouble; but none of them helped me; so my wife advised trying Electric Bitters, which are restoring me to perfect health. One bottle did a more good than the five doctors prescribed." Guaranteed for blood poison, weakness and all stomach, liver and kidney complaints, by Upchurch Drug Co. 50c.

When We Were All Tenors.

The primitive inhabitants of Europe were all tenors. Their descendants of the present time are baritones, and future generations will have semibass voices. The voice has a tendency to deepen with age. The tenor of twenty becomes the baritone of twenty-eight and the bass of thirty-six. The inferior races have higher pitched voices than the more cultured. The negro has a higher voice than the white man. Among white races the fair complexioned man has a higher voice than his darker skinned brother. The former is usually a baritone or a tenor, the latter a contralto or bass. It is asserted that tenors are usually of slender build, whereas basses are stout, but there are too many exceptions to such a rule for it to be reliable. The same remark applies to the statement that thoughtful men have deep toned voices, and vice versa. The tones of a voice are perceptibly higher before than after a meal, for which reason tenors are generally careful not to sing too soon after dinner.—Pearson's Weekly.

Ways of Hunting.

Deerstalking among the Dogrib Indians is managed by a skillful counterfeit of the animal. Two hunters walk together—the man behind with bent body, the one in front carrying a stag's head. The legs of the men serve very well for the fore and hind legs of the animal. In this way the hunters get almost in the midst of a herd of deer before the creatures are aware of danger.

The ostrich is hunted in a similar way by the bushmen of South Africa, and the Eskimos sometimes come to close quarters with seals by dressing themselves in sealskins and dexterously mimicking the style of swimming and "dopping" so characteristic of the animal.

In Australia the natives bring the wallaby or young kangaroo within the range of the spear by suspending a small bird's skin and feathers from the end of a long rod and imitating the bird's cry.—London Strand.

Farsighted Economy.

Mrs. Wipedunks — Jenkinson, we ought to take one of the first class magazines. It's only $4 a year, and the children are getting old enough now to have something good to read.

Mr. Wipedunks—Only $4 a year! That's all, is it? If you begin on magazines you'll think you have to keep it up. At the end of every year you'll want to have 'em bound. There's two volumes in a year. Costs $1 a volume for binding. That makes $6 a year. In ten years it's $60. Then you'll want a bookcase to hold the twenty volumes. That'll cost about $25 because you'll think it ought to be big enough to hold the twenty more volumes. There's $85 thrown away. Do you think I'm made of money? If you want to read the magazines, what's the matter with borrowing 'em?—Chicago Tribune.

A Great Telescope.

A number of persons were talking about telescopes, and each professed to have looked through the "largest in the world." One after another told of the powerful effect of the respective telescopes. At last a quiet man said mildly: "I once looked through a telescope. I don't know that it was the largest in the world. I hope it wasn't. But it brought the moon so near that we could see the man in it gesticulating wildly and crying out: 'Don't shoot! Don't shoot!' The old duffer thought it was a big cannon that we were pointing at him." The quiet man subsided

Crab Has 2,000,000 Joints.

The crab known as the scale tailed apus was believed to have become extinct in Great Britain fifty years ago, the last recorded specimens being taken in the ponds on Hampstead heath. But now it has turned up again in some numbers in two ponds on Preston Morse, near Southwick, in Kirkcudbrightshire. About two and a half inches long, the apus bears a very striking likeness to that remarkable creature, the king crab, and this because the fore part of the body is covered by a great semicircular shield or carapace, while, as in the king crab, it swims on its back. In the great number of its legs the scale tailed apus has few rivals, while in the number of the points which these share between them no other creature can compare. The naturalist Schaffer once essayed the task of counting them and made the magnificent total of 1,802,604. Latrelle put down the number at a round 2,000,000.—London Graphic.

German Universities.

The examination for the degree of doctor of philosophy in the German universities will be sufficiently illustrated by giving in brief the requirements in the University of Jena. The candidate after gaining permission to enter for the degree presents a short sketch of his life in Latin or German, a maturity certificate, evidence of at least three years of academical study, evidence that he has enjoyed a good reputation up to the present time, an original scientific treatise in German in his own handwriting and a written declaration on word of honor and oath that the thesis is the candidate's own composition. The payment of 240 marks is required. In the oral examination the subject of chief importance is that of which the thesis treats, while the candidate is allowed to select two minor subjects. After this examination and the distribution of 200 copies of the thesis to the faculty the degree is conferred.—School Bulletin.

Insect Hypnotism.

"Did you ever know," said the hypnotist as he played with a curious, glittering hypnotising machine of crystal and silver, "did you ever know that hypnotism is practiced among insects?"

"No."

"Well, it is a fact. A queen bee can hypnotise her whole hive whenever she wants to. She makes a curious humming sound, and within a moment or two every bee in the colony falls into a hypnotic trance.

"The death's head hawk moth is also a hypnotist of great power. This creature, indeed, makes its living out of hypnotism. Entering a hive, it makes a sound not unlike the queen bee's note, and, the bees immediately sinking into slumber, the moth proceeds to plunder at its leisure."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Free Consent of the People.

The "pioneer American Democrat" was the Rev. Thomas Hooker of Connecticut, who, in a sermon in Hartford in the year 1638, said, "The foundation of all authority is fastly laid in the free consent of the people." There, in embryo, were the Revolution and the great republic. In the "Fundamental Orders of Connecticut," inspired by Hooker and adopted at Hartford in 1638, we have the first written constitution known to history that created a government. And that government was as near a perfect democracy as the world has ever seen.—New York American.

There is a number of people who are under an erroneous impression. They think that they never control enough money to start a bank account. In this they are mistaken. We solicit small accounts as well as large. And we handle the business of both with our best care. We believe that you ought to have a bank account, and we offer you our services.

THE CLANTON BANK

CLANTON, ALA.

Many people seem to think that unless they can open a Savings Account with not less than $50.00 or $100.00, it is not worth the while to begin. This is not a correct position to take. If a person cannot open an account with more than $1.00, and really desires to get some money ahead, then he should begin with even $1.00. The first dollar saved and put in bank, is the initial step on the way to prosperity. "Great oaks from little acorns grow." As a rule, the person who "Puts off" the opening of a Savings Account until he has a large amount to deposit, is not likely to ever have a bank account. We solicit your account.

Thorsby, Ala., Dec. 24, 1907.

Dear Editor—Please allow me a small space in your paper as I have been silent for quite awhile. The health of our community is fairly good except measels, for we have a lot of them.

Well, as the year 1907 is swiftly drawing to a close never to return, many precious lives have closed out during its stay with us, we should remember that we too, with some future year must pass out.

[illegible] to be at Mount Nebo, for fear that some one might reach the conclusion that the Chilton County Singing Convention asked for a home at Mount Nebo, or in other words, tried to impose themselves upon that community, I wish to make an explanation of facts right here. At our singing at Liberty the fifth Sunday in September, one or more gentlemen who claimed to be of Mount Nebo community, earnestly asked the Convention to meet with them the second Sunday in November, stating that there was the best place in the county for a singing as they had the best and largest house in the county, furthermore, stating that we would meet with a cordial welcome and would be well cared for while there. With this assurance we consented to meet with them at the time mentioned above and announced it in the papers the following week and heard of no objections until on Saturday before the singing was to be on Sunday. The cause of this disappointment I am unable to state. I must say that I had an invitation to Mount Nebo last June to lead the song service at the Sunday School Convention and was treated very nice and everything seemed to work for good and I trust that this little controversy will drop at this and never be resurrected any more, for nothing good ever arises from such frivolous matters. With best wishes to you all for a merry Xmas and a happy New Year.

FIRE AT CLANTON.

Sunday night, about six o'clock, a blaze in the eastern sky denoted fire, and it was soon discovered that the house occupied by Mr. Barnett, one mile east of Clanton, and owned by Mr. John Garner, was on fire and burning vigorously. Mr. Barnett had only moved into the house about a week ago, and that morning had gone with his wife to visit his father in-law, and was hastily summoned by a neighbor to view the ruin of his home. Everything was destroyed; if there was any insurance we have not been able to learn of it.

SEVERE LOSS BY FIRE

Quarter Million Dollar Blaze at Baltimore, Md.

OTHER PROPERTY IN DANGER

About 350 Employees Worked at Different Avocations in the Burned Structure and These Have Been Thrown Out of Work Indefinitely.

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 21.—A fire of threatening proportions broke out about 3:30 o'clock Saturday morning in the five-story building at 325 West Baltimore street, and was not checked until damage of nearly a quarter of a million dollars had been done.

The building was occupied by the wholesale millinery establishment of Wilensky Bros. & Co., the Baltimore Overall company and Robinson, Va. Epstein & Co., cap makers.

The flames spread to No. 327 West Baltimore street adjoining. This building, also five stories, was destroyed above the second floor. It was occupied by Reinhard, Meyer & Co., clothing, and the Walter L. Denny company, wall papers. the stocks of both firms were ruined.

The fire also spread to some extent to No. 323, occupied by the Baltimore Shoe company, where damage was done by water as well as by fire.

Mr. Denny, of the wall paper company, said that his stock amounted to about $80,000, nearly all covered by insurance.

Meyer Wilensky, a member of the firm that occupied 325, could not give an estimate of his loss, but said that it would be very large, as the four floors used by his firm were stocked with millinery. His loss is partially covered by insurance. Mr. Wilensky said he employed about 250 employees and that all of them would be out of work until they started up again.

The Baltimore Overall company employs about 150 hands, and this was their busy season.

The damage to buildings numbers 325 and 327, exclusive of stock, will probably amount to between $50,000 and $100,000.

$140,000 Fire at Detroit.

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 21.—Fire early Saturday morning gutted the six story brick building at the corner of Jefferson and Woodward avenues occupied by Edwin S. George, fur dealer, and D. B. Kellogg, wholesale milliner.

Th etotal losses is about $140,000, divided as follows:

Edwin S. George, $100,000; D. B. Kellogg, $20,000, and W. N. Carpenter estate, owners of the buildings, $20,000.

Assistant Fire Chief Kelly and Fireman Robert Hummel were severely injured by escaping horses. Hummel's skull was fractured and he may die.

CHILD BORN AT SEA.

Its Mother Died, However, Without Ever Seeing It.

New York, Dec. 21.—Among the passengers on board the Mauretania, which arrived in New York Friday was Ruth Lang, thirteen days old.

The child was born at sea off the west coast of Africa and her life cost that of her mother, who died without ever seeing her.

On board the ship was Miss Hattie Crosby, a missionary returning to her home in Hough on, N. Y., from Sierra Leone. Miss Crosby volunteered to take care of the child and bring her to America.

The little one's grandparents live in Toronto, and the baby will be turned over to them. Ruth's father and mother went to Northern Nigeria two years ago as missionaries.

Valuation of Railroad Property.

Chicago, Dec. 21.—A dispatch to the Tribune from Madison, Wis., says that the Wisconsin state board of assessments has announced that it has fixed the valuation of the property of the railroad companies in that state at $283,361,500, an increase of $13,111,500 over that of last year. The taxes of the roads during the coming year will be about $3,945,362, an increase of $143,577.

Dived Into an Open Well.

Homer, La., Dec. 21.—Illness and financial worry were responsible for the suicide here of George Gill, manager of the local cotton exchange. Interrupting an interview with his physician, Mr. Gill walked over to the rear of his residence and dived into an open well. He fractured his skull on a bucket.

Bryan and Harmon in Birmingham.

Birmingham, Ala., Dec. 21.—It was announced Thursday that William Jennings Bryan and Judson Harmon, of Ohio, will be guests of the Birmingham board of trade at the big annual dinner to be given on the night of January 23. Mr. Bryan will arrive from Nashville and will leave Birmingham for Washington on the 24th.

Whitelaw Reid Arrives.

New York, Dec. 21—Whitelaw Reid, the American ambassador to Great Britain, arrived here Friday on the Cunarder Mauretania.

MAKING TOUR OF GLOBE.

Tourist Carries Unique Book Containing Signatures in Many Languages.

Gadsden, Ala., Dec. 21.—A globe trotter, Henry Moore, a native of Atlanta, Georgia, arrived here Saturday on his tour of the world, which he is making on a wager. He has only six months in which to finish the interesting trip, and is confident he will win out. He has been arrested often and has suffered many hardships on his long journey.

Moore's home is at Lyons, France, and he is a member of the Touring club of France. The condition of the wager is that the first man in the contest who returns to Lyons after his trip will receive the prize of $10,000 that was put up three years ago by the Sportsman's club of London and the Touring club of France. Both clubs had four representatives when the contest began, but now only two are left, one an Englishman, now in East India, and Mr. Moore. Three of the contestants died in Australia; two were murdered in Abyssinia, and one was killed in China.

Moore carries a unique book with him in which is written the name of each place he has visited, together with the signatures of natives of each of the respective places. The book contains signatures in almost every language of the world.

NINE FIREMEN INJURED.

Damage to Extent of $350,000 Done by Fire at Wilkesbarre, Pa.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Dec. 23.—Nine firemen were injured and damage to the extent of $350,000 was done by a fire which originated in the Globe dry goods store of Langford Bros. Sunday.

Two of the firemen were overcome by smoke, two others were seriously cut by flying glass and five were burned about the hands and face.

The contents of the building, a five-story brick structure, were completely destroyed. The estimated loss to Langford Bros. is $200,000. The loss on the building, which was owned by the Bernard Berguader estate, is about $50,000.

Structures adjoining the burned buildings on either side were slightly damaged. None of the firemen are fatally hurt.

It is thought that the fire originated from a defective electric light switchboard located in the basement of the Globe store.

FLAMES RAGE AT FT. SMITH.

Damage Amounts to $175,000—Two Are Missing.

Fort Smith, Ark., Dec. 23.—Fire early Sunday destroyed the Haglin office building, the American National and two other buildings. The damage is estimated at $175,000.

J. A. McVitty, a cotton buyer, and a man named Kaufman, who slept in the Haglin building, are missing, and it is believed they have perished.

Captain Found Dead in Cabin.

Wilmington, N. C., Dec. 23.—Captain Lake, 46 years of age, master of the British steamer Hillmore, which cleared Saturday for Bremen with a cargo of cotton, was found dead in his cabin Sunday as the vessel was passing down the river on her way to sea. Captain Lake had been suffering with acute nervousness for several days before leaving here, and it is believed that either by mistake or design, he took carbolic acid in sufficient quantity to cause his death. Captain Lake was a native of Liverpool.

Bankhead Undergoes Operation.

Birmingham, Ala., Dec. 22.—A telephone message from Ensley, a suburb, stated that United States Senator J. H. Bankhead, of Alabama, had to undergo a little operation, and that the same was performed by Dr. R. M. Cunningham, former lieutenant governor of Alabama, Friday afternoon. The patient was improving Saturday morning. There is no danger of the operation proving fatal.

Charged with Murder.

New Orleans, La., Dec. 23.—John Brown, a negro, was brought to New Orleans Friday from Pontchatoula, La, where he was arrested during the night, charged with being the murderer of Mrs. Hans Nelson near Hammond, La. Mrs. Nelson's body was found riddled with shot. Suspicion pointed to Brown, who had quarreled with her over the ownership of a dog. Brown declares he is innocent.

Pennsylvania Mine Burning.

Pittsburg, Pa., Dec. 23.—Fire started in the Schoenberger mine near Monongahela Saturday and raged for many hours. The mine has been idle for a month on account of a strike. It was at first reported that another mine explosion had occurred, but investigation shows that the fire started from crossed wires. The property loss will probably be heavy.

Charged with Robbing Mails.

Albany, Ga., Dec. 23.—R. C. Smith, a negro mail carrier, was arrested on Thursday evening by Inspectors R. C. Bannerman and C. H. Webster, charged with robbing the mails. He was locked up on a state warrant. United States Commissioner E. J. Dixon being absent from the city. Smith is the first Albany carrier to get into trouble with the government.

DARR MINE DISASTER

Work of Taking Out Mangled Bodies Proceeds Slowly.

POISONOUS GAS INTERFERES

Reliable Estimates on the Number of Victims Are Now 325—Much Suffering Among Victims' Families—Relief Committees To Be Formed.

Jacobs Creek, Pa., Dec. 21.—In the short distance rescuers were able to penetrate the Darr mine, the scene of Thursday's explosion, Friday night, half a dozen bodies were found and brought to the surface, making the total number that have reached the morgue up to Saturday morning 12.

Danger of Other Explosions.

While a vast amount of work was done during the night, not much progress was made towards the entries in which the great mass of bodies are entombed. The danger of another explosion is imminent and the rescuing forces dare not venture far ahead of the forces erecting the temporary brattices. Vast quantities of gas have been encountered and the volume seems to be steadily increasing.

Company officials have ordered that exploring parties shall advance only as fast as the passage way can be cleared of gas, ventilated and otherwise made safe. While what appears to be the most reliable estimates on the number of victims are near 300, there are many who insist that the final list of dead will contain many more names.

Michael Hallpy, national organizer for the United Mine Workers of America, who has assumed charge here for the organization, says:

House-to-House Canvass.

"I have made a house-to-house canvass among the families here, and am certain that there are 300 dead men in the Darr mine."

Evidence of much suffering and distress among those dependent upon the victims has already been disclosed and steps have been taken to organize relief committees. The Consolidville board of trade has subscribed $100, and called a meeting for ministers of all denominations to organize a permanent committee. New Haven took similar action. McKeesport has also started a relief movement, while in Pittsburg funds are being raised to be distributed among the sufferers of the recent disaster.

James E. Roderick, chief of the state department of mining, heads the state mine inspectors of the state to meet him here to assist in rescue work and to investigate the cause of the explosion.

Evans' Fleet Heard from.

Newport, R. I., Dec. 21—The wireless apparatus at the navy yard Friday night succeeded in catching parts of a message from the battleships of the fleet of Admiral Evans, the Connecticut, and the battleship Alabama, but the working of a Long Island steamer's wireless machine, it is claimed, interfered with perfect work. Lloyd Bonsey, aged 14, whose wireless apparatus of his own invention is conceded to be one of the best on the coast, caught messages from the battleships which are now 1,200 miles distant in a straight line. His success was verified by the naval station.

Will Play Havana Eleven.

New Orleans, La., Dec. 21.—On board the steamer Chalmette an American football team, the Louisiana state university eleven, sailed to play a Christmas day game in Havana, Cuba. The university of Havana eleven will oppose the American boys. The Louisiana team, although not ranking with the leaders in southern football, had one of the best teams of the season in the southwest in point of fast, open and spectacular playing. The team is due to reach Havana on Monday.

Says Diphtheria Not Contagious.

New York, Dec. 21.—Dr. C. M. Swiney, of Bayonne, N. J., says that he will petition the board of health to have diphtheria stricken from the list of contagious diseases. He said that the disease was not contagious, and that there was no necessity in quarantining houses where the disease exists, and no reason for keeping children from school when there happens to be a case in the family.

Charged with Extortion.

New York, Dec. 21—The grand jury has returned an indictment against Herman Voecks charging him with extortion. He is charged with having extorted three diamond rings valued at $900 and with having demanded $1,500 from Raymond Hitchcock, the actor. Voecks is a brother of Max Voecks, who was one of the complainants against Hitchcock, whose daughter was held on a prison charge.

Mitchell's Condition Serious.

Indianapolis, Ind., Dec. 21.—The condition of John Mitchell, of the United Mine Workers of America, remains about the same as when he was taken sick. He is confined to his room in the Claypool hotel, to which he was taken. Dr. R. S. Hodgin, who is attending him, said that he regards Mr. Mitchell's condition as serious.

TRAGEDY IN NEW YORK.

Bank Cashier Kills President Because Latter Bit and Himself.

New York, Dec. 21.—James H. Oliphant, senior member of the stock exchange firm of James H. Oliphant & Co., is dead from a bullet wound inflicted at his office Friday afternoon by Charles A. Geiger, a customer from Beaufort, S. C., who, after firing upon Oliphant, killed himself.

The men were closeted in Oliphant's private office at the time, and all that is known of what immediately preceded the shooting was learned from the lips of the broker before he died.

Oliphant said that his refusal to extend further credit to Geiger caused the tragedy. There is reason to believe, however, that Geiger had become mentally irresponsible. A note book found upon his person contained computations by which the writer apparently had figured that he would be worth $3,000,000 by January 1, 1908. He actually possessed, so far as personal efforts showed, less than $11.

Geiger, it is said, owed the Oliphant company $2,000, and had been asked for a settlement. He called at their office Friday, and after explaining that he could not meet his obligations, asked that the firm advance him sufficient credit to carry two thousand shares of a certain stock until a rise in the price should give him profit. His proposition was refused, and the shooting followed.

The offices of James H. Oliphant & Co., are at 20 Broad street, in the center of the financial district, and the shooting caused a sensation in the street, and temporarily interrupted the business of the curb traders, the scene of whose activities are overlooked from the big office building.

GAVE LIVE SKIN TO FRIEND.

Successful Skin-Grafting Performed on New York Man.

New York, Dec. 21.—Frank Waters will be able to eat his Christmas dinner at home because thirty of his friends gave bits of their skin to help him.

Waters was burned by a premature explosion of fireworks July 4, and has been in a hospital ever since. For nearly five months the burns refused to heal and the doctors finally decided that skin grafting was necessary.

Waters was a member of the Holy Name Society, of St. Leo's Roman Catholic church, and the young man's society was asked to come to Waters' assistance. Thirty were selected, and from the arm of each was taken a bit of live skin which was applied to the wounds on Waters' body. It took five days to complete the operation, which has proved successful.

REPORT ON COTTON.

Census Bureau Issues Bulletin on the Number of Bales Ginned.

Washington, Dec. 21.—The census bureau has issued a bulletin showing that the total amount of cotton of this year's growth in the United States ginned up to Dec. 13 last was 9,281,077 bales, as compared with 11,112,733 bales for the same period last year, and 9,297,819 bales for the same period in 1895.

The total number of active ginneries was 27,152.

In this bulletin, round bales are counted as half bales.

The number of round bales included is 167,485 for 1907 and 243,096 for 1906 and 253,137 for 1905.

Sea Island included 65,146 for 1907, and 49,361 for 1906 and 90,836 for 1905.

Seceded Just 47 Years Ago.

Columbia, S. C., Dec. 21.—On the 20th day of December, 1860, just forty-seven years ago, South Carolina seceded from the union and precipitated the war between the sections. The ordinance of secession was passed in Charleston and signed on the 20th of December, forty-seven years ago, and of the 170 delegates who that night affixed their signatures to the now historic document, only three are at this day living.

Petition in Bankruptcy.

New York, Dec. 21.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against the Plasmon company, of which Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) is acting president. The company manufactures milk products and is a branch of an English company. It is stated that Mr. Clemens invested something like $2,500 in the company, which is now bankrupt. The company's liabilities are $27,000 and its nominal assets, $10,000.

Trouble May Be Arbitrated.

New York, Dec. 21.—The local branch of the Brotherhood of Carpenters has decided not to accept the cut in wages from $5 to $4.50 a day, proposed by the master carpenters. The cut was to become effective on January 14. The master carpenters say that in the present state of trade the cut is necessary. It is probable that the trouble will be arbitrated.

Pleads Self-Defense in Murder Case.

Birmingham, Ala., Dec. 21.—C. T. Whitfield, who recently shot and killed W. B. Perryman, a carpenter, with whom he had a previous difficulty in a saloon, is on trial for the homicide. He pleads self-defense declaring that Perryman cursed him and his wife, with whom he was walking just before the shooting.

FIST FIGHT IN HOUSE

John Sharp Williams and Rep. DeArmond Clash.

WILLIAMS HIT FIRST BLOW

Minority Leader and Representative from Missouri Fall Out and Vigorous Fight Follows After the Passing of the Lie.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 20—John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi, leader of the minority, and Representative David A. DeArmond, of Missouri, engaged in a fist fight over the passing of the lie on the floor of the house of representatives Thursday afternoon immediately after adjournment at 3:30 p. m. Mr. Williams struck the first blow and Mr. DeArmand retaliated vigorously with clenched fists.

When the combatants were separated, blood was flowing down Mr. Williams' face from a small gash in the left cheek and his forehead was red and abrased. Mr. DeArmand bore no mark of the fray.

The encounter was witnessed by more than 100 members of the house and by as many more persons in the galleries, among them a score of women.

The house having just adjourned, groups of representatives were standing or sitting about, discussing the committee appointments that had been announced by the speaker.

The immediate cause of the fight was the passing of the lie by DeArmand to Mr. Williams, resultant on a complaint by the former that the minority leader had broken faith in "burying" Representative Booher of Missouri by recommending his assignment by Speaker Cannon to the committee on coinage, weights and measures. According to the statements of the principals, Mr. Williams defended his action by declaring he had been told by Mr. Booher's colleagues, Representative Lloyd of Missouri, that the committee assignments would be satisfactory to Mr. Booher. Mr. DeArmand bluntly questioned the truth of the statement, and after the failure of the effort on his part to transfer the scene of the impending battle, Mr. Williams struck Mr. DeArmand in the face with closed fist.

WOMAN MURDERED.

Was Found Lying in the Woods Horribly Mutilated.

Hammond, La., Dec. 20—Horribly mutilated, the left side of her face entirely gone, and her body riddled with shot, Mrs Mary Nelson, 45 years of age, one of the most respected women in the parish, was found lying in what is known as Happy Woods road, about two miles west of here on Thursday.

The murder was committed with a shotgun, loaded with a mixture of bird and buckshot, evidently held by some one standing about ten feet from her.

Mrs. Nelson was not assaulted, nor were there any evidences of robbery, but suspicion has fallen upon a negro with whom Mrs. Nelson had a quarrel over the ownership of a dog. So far there is no trace of the negro, but Sheriff Hall, of Amite, is on the trail, and a capture is expected.

FORGOT TO HOLD ELECTION.

Instance Unparalleled in History of Municipal Affairs.

Thomasville, Ga., Dec. 20.—The citizens of Camilla at their last primary for city officers elected a mayor by only a small majority of three votes after a most strenuous campaign.

Resting on the laurels of victory, the people forgot all about the election confirming the primary, and none was held.

This leaves them with no officers for the coming year, and is an instance unparalleled in the history of municipal affairs.

It is not known what the outcome of the affair will be, as there is no precedent to go by. The people are looking into the matter with much interest and speculation.

FIRE AT JACKSONVILLE.

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 20.—The four-story brick building occupied by the Vehicle and Harness company at this place, was burned Friday. The loss is estimated at $35,000.

For a time a hotel adjoining the harness company's building was threatened, but the fire was confined to the building where it started.

Steerage Rush Is Over.

New York, Dec. 20.—Steamship agents say that the great rush of steerage passengers bound for Europe is practically over. The French line Lafayette carried 400 additional passengers Thursday and the White Star liner Adriatic 600, in each case the capacity of the ship.

Railroad Grain Furloined.

West Point, Miss., Dec. 20.—An unknown individual entered a box car and was engaged and took two sacks of oats from there Friday and it is believed every member of the crew pocketed

MAJOR CURRY DEAD.

Noted Automobile Authority Passes Away in Atlanta, Ga.

Atlanta, Dec. 21.—Major Daniel Curry, prominent in the automobile world and a member of the Boston Senator A. O. [illegible] died in an automobile accident here Wednesday night.

The accident occurred on Ponce de Leon avenue, the fashionable street that runs through the residence section. Major Curry was driving his car at a rapid rate of speed when he collided with a street car. He was thrown violently to the pavement and received injuries which caused his death.

Major Curry was a native of Georgia, having been born in Athens. He was a graduate of the University of Georgia and was a prominent figure in the automobile world. He was a member of the Automobile Association of America, and was at the time of his death a member of the executive committee of that organization.

TRAGEDY IN FLORIDA.

Young Man Shoots and Kills Personal Friend.

Pensacola, Fla., Dec. 21.—A special from Argyle, Fla., a small town [illegible] of here, says:

Crazed with drink, Alexander Anderson drew a revolver and shot his personal friend, C. A. Wood, instantly killing him instantly. The shooting, it is said, had been drinking together and at the time were chatting pleasantly and talking. There had been no quarrel or harsh words.

Anderson, after firing the fatal shot, staggered from the room to the gallery in front of the store and fired the remaining cartridge in his pistol in the air, after which he fell to the floor in a drunken stupor, and there until the sheriff was summoned.

When the sheriff arrived, he found Anderson, who was still in a semi-conscious condition, in the store and took him to jail. When questioned the next morning of what he had done, he was overwhelmed with grief and remorse, and wildly declared he knew nothing of what had occurred. Both young men are members of prominent families in this section of the state.

Commuted Cashier's Sentence.

Topeka, Kans., Dec. 21.—Governor Hoch Thursday commuted to seven years the sentence of J. S. Dodds, the Highland, Kans., bank cashier in prison for forgery under indeterminate sentence. For three years Dodds cell seat to city banks keeping collateral for cash loans, amounting all about $200,000 on it. His [illegible] loss wrecked the bank.

HINTS FOR FARMERS

Oat Straw as Food For Stock.

Oat straw is the only kind of straw that can be beneficially used as food, and it is acceptable to stock, says American Cultivator.

Moldy straw, like other moldy stuff, is repulsive and injurious as food, but a clean, sweet sample of oat straw is very seductive and will be preferred to much of the material that is collected as hay from poor pastures. It is a great saving to the hay. Horses are very partial to oat straw. Cows relish it greatly as part of their mixed rations during the winter, and cattle can often be maintained on it as their only fodder in severe weather or when grass is scarce.

For horses and cows it may be chopped and mixed at the rate of half hay and half straw, and some go farther and give nearly all straw to save the hay. Sheep are the only stock that do not seem at home with it, but the quantity of hay they eat is never very great.

The Farm Water Supply.

The first essential is to procure pure water for our farms, and the second is to keep it from becoming contaminated. Therefore in locating a new well place it at a safe distance from the barnyard and have it pumped by means of a small windmill and forced to the barn or house. This can be arranged at a comparatively small cost, and it will be found to be one of the greatest comforts on the farm not only from a sanitary point of view, but also as a great saving of labor.

Another method of getting a water supply of which many farms might avail themselves is by means of a hydraulic ram. Any one who has a spring with a fall within a reasonable distance can have a ram installed and force the water a long distance and also raise it a considerable height, depending on the fall at the spring.—American Cultivator.

Good Treatment Pays.

Kindness to a horse isn't merely sentiment; it is sound business. The horse that is well cared for will do more and better work than the horse that is neglected. The most practical blanket for a horse, next to good and proper feed, is a good horse blanket for the winter months. Exposure to cold and sudden changes in the weather make a horse liable to ailments, such as colds, influenza and pneumonia. Stiff joints and muscles, too, are often brought on by exposure or by leaving a horse without a blanket in the cold barn after he has been worked. A good horse blanket, properly used, will prevent diseases of this kind and often save more than its cost in medicines and doctoring.

Horse Notes.

Overhead hayracks compel the horses to inhale dust. This is bad for the lungs. Hay should be well forked and shaken and slightly dampened and fed on the floor or in slatted mangers.

The farmer should not buy his work horses; he should raise them. He can grow them at a profit. It is better for the average farmer to raise draft colts. Only the man who is a born horse lover can raise roadsters profitably.

Look out for the weanlings, that they do not get a setback.

Colts like fine hay much better than they do coarse. Second growth hay fed a little at a time is preferable.—Farm Journal.

Beware of Frequent Colds.

A succession of colds or a protracted cold is almost certain to end in chronic catarrh, from which few persons ever wholly recover. Give every cold the attention it deserves and you may avoid this disagreeable disease. How can you cure a cold? Why not try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy? It is highly recommended. Mrs. J. White, of Butler, Texas, says: "Several years ago I was bothered with my throat and lungs. Someone told me of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I began using it and it relieved me at once. Now my throat and lungs are sound and well." For sale by Upchurch Drug co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thornby.

The SPORTING WORLD

Ponderous Jap Wrestler Visits America.

Taniemon Hitachiyama is big in name and big in body. He is a Japanese wrestler, weighing 280 pounds, and is on a visit to this country to try to stave Uncle Sam from declaring war on Japan.

Hitachiyama recently gave an exhibition before President Roosevelt in Washington. He does not know much about the American or English styles of mat work. He is a disciple of the Japanese style called sumo. In sumo the two opponents squat in front of each other, and the one that is forced down on to a knee is beaten.

Williams Swimmers Leave League.

Williams college has just announced through its athletic council that its swimming association will not join the Intercollegiate league this year. There is a wealth of good material at the Williamstown institution, and so cleverly is it being handled that every one expects to see good teams developed and entered in the championships.

There is still talk of a triangular association composed of Brown, Williams and Amherst being formed, and it is not improbable that it will be launched in the near future. Williams belongs by right in the major organization. Radford McCormack, who has taken charge of the boys, is a former star of the Brookline (Mass.) Swimming club and, like every man turned out by Brookline, believes in thoroughness. Both he and Captain F. R. Booker, Jr., realize that in swimming form is the principal factor, so they have cut out all speed trials, and even the veterans are kept perfecting their stroke and practicing starts and turns.

Basket Ball Leagues.

New York basket ball men have launched a movement for the organization of a professional basket ball league, with a circuit of six or eight cities, including New York, Brooklyn and other cities in the metropolitan district and New England. Theodore C. Rose of the Protective Basket Ball association and John H. Poppe of the Xavier club are working on the plans.

It is proposed to operate under a set of by-laws and a constitution such as govern baseball leagues. The circuit will be from six to ten cities. The promoters have interested basket ball men in New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City, Newark, Paterson, Hoboken, Boston, Newport, Fall River, Providence, Schenectady and Gloversville, and it is believed that from these cities a compact circuit can be constructed.

A Boon to Elderly People

Most elderly people have some kidney or bladder disorder that is both painful and dangerous. Foley's Kidney Remedy has proven a boon to many elderly people as it stimulates the urinary organs, corrects irregularities and tones up the whole system. Commence taking Foley's Kidney Remedy at once and be vigorous. Upchurch Drug co.

Feeding Hogs in Winter.

It is difficult to carry breeding and stock hogs satisfactorily through the winter without the use of the clover hay or alfalfa, says Farm Journal. Feed to be satisfactory should possess reasonable bulk. Clover or alfalfa hay cut and moistened with hot water and then mixed with the grain and slopp feed is most nutritious and satisfying. It is not well to feed a lot of this stuff. Give the drink in the shape of pure, clean water, not in this stuff.

Shelter For the Sow.

The individual hog house is the best of all shelters for the brood sow and her pigs. By individual is meant the house which will shelter only one sow and her young. The apartment hog house is about as unhealthy as the crowded apartment houses in cities. Individual houses can be put up very cheaply and will be found much more satisfactory.

For That Dull Feeling After Eating.

I have used Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets for some time and can testify that they have done me more good than any tablets I have ever used. My trouble was a heavy dull feeling after eating.—DAVID FREEMAN, Kempt, Nova Scotia. These tablets strengthen the stomach and improve the digestion. They also regulate the liver and bowels. They are far superior to pills but cost no more. Get a free sample at Upchurch Drug co., Clanton; or A. Horn, Thornby, and see what a splendid medicine it is.

The Southern Educational Association will hold its annual meeting at Lexington, Kentucky, on Dec 26-28, where the Conference for Education in the South met nearly two years ago. The local committees are making arrangements for entertainment, and every effort is being made to make this a profitable and enjoyable occasion.

In the quo warranto proceedings before the Supreme Court last week, in the case of the State vs. Emmett A. Matthews, mayor of the town of Clanton, the Supreme Court affirmed the decision of the lower court

When the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal in the case of J J. Grant vs. the Lousville and Nashville railroad on the grounds that the Circuit Court at Chilton county, where the case was tried, was not held according to law, the complexion of the laws governing that court was considerably changed. The decision, in a manner, clears up the muddle in which the court has been for some time but at the same time gets the docket into a very bad shape.

By making this decision the Supreme Court declared the part of the general act known as the Lusk bill, which provided for the time when the court should be held, unconstitutional. It was set forth by the court that the times when the court should be held were not properly set forth in the new law. At the last session of the Legislature there were two laws passed governing the time when Circuit court in Chilton county, Elmore and Autauga counties were to be held, the first one was a general bill by Mr. Lusk which is the one just declared unconstitutional in part. The second was a local bill which stated that the circuit courts shohld be held at some other time..

Improving the Breed.

Shortly after a new administration took hold of a well known southern railroad a great number of claims were preferred against the company on account of horses and cattle being killed along the line in Kentucky. To make matters worse, it appeared that every animal killed, however worthless it may have been before the accident, invariably figured in the claims subsequently presented as being of the best blood in Kentucky. One day in conversation with one of the road's attorneys the president became very much excited in referring to the situation. "Do you know," he exclaimed, bringing down his fist on the desk by way of emphasis, "I have reached the conclusion that nothing in Kentucky ever improves live stock as crossing it with a locomotive."—Montreal Star.

English Marriages.

Every year from 800 to 1,200 couples go to England from the continent, mostly from Germany, to get married. To comply with the conditions of the English laws the bride usually "goes over first, stays one night in a hotel and gives notice of the marriage on the following day. Then the man arrives and the ceremony takes place. It is generally by license, as otherwise both would have to be in England for four weeks.

In Doubt.

A man who does not mind a joke at his own expense says he went into a chemist's recently and asked for some morphine. The shopman objected to giving it without a prescription.

"Do I look like a man who would kill himself?" the customer asked.

"I don't know, I'm sure," said the chemist, "but if I looked like you I should be tempted."—London Answers.

A CASH OFFER.

The Banner has made a special clubbing rate with The Memphis Weekly Commercial Appeal by which we will furnish both papers for one year for the regular subscription price, $1.00. The Commercial Appeal is one of the largest and best papers in the South and we hope to receive many new subscriptions on this offer; $1.00 cash for both papers. Everyone shoul take their home paper first for the local news, and then a general weekly for the news of the world. These two papers make a strong combination. Both papers $1.0C.

Sweden's New King.

"With the death of Oscar II. the succession to the throne of Sweden passed to Oscar Gustave Adolphus, eldest son of the late king. The new king took the oath of allegiance under the title of Gustave V. and adopted the motto, "With the People For the Fatherland." Gustave much resembles his father in gigantic stature and in light, Saxon blond features.

He was born in the castle of Drottningholm in 1858 and immediately after his birth was made Duke of Wermland. He pursued his studies from 1877 to 1878 at Upsala. In 1879 he traveled abroad, visiting almost all the countries of Europe. In 1880 he returned a second time to the university at Upsala.

GUSTAVE V. OF SWEDEN.

He entered the army in 1875, and in 1892 he received the rank of general lieutenant. In 1896 he served as inspector of the military schools, and in 1898 he was made a full general.

Between the years 1884 and 1891 he filled the office of vice king of Norway.

Gustave V. was married Sept. 20, 1881, to Princess Victoria of Baden-Baden.

Riddle and Answer.

I tremble with each breath of air
And yet can heaviest burdens bear;
'Tis known that I destroyed the world
And all things in confusion hurled,
And yet I do preserve all in it
Through each revolving hour and minute.

Bay City, Tex., Dec. 21, 1907

Editor Banner—As I promised to give an account of our party, please allow me space to tell of our visit. This party consists of Felix R. Woodyard and family of Clanton and E. H. Lowe of Jemison. We arrived at Bay City Thursday, Dec. 19, at 12:40 p.m., and were driven to the home of our brother, J. T. Lowe, where we soon had dinner. Soon after dinner Woodyard and myself struck out to town and set ourselves up to a pair of "Red Boots" apiece and went out for the game, right there and then the shooting began and has been going on ever since. We come in every day loaded with game and fish and have them every meal. We will go to the Colorado River tomorrow and try the larger fish and game. We have not killed any bear or deer yet but will go out about Dec. 26 and give them a fair square trial. We have been eating Texas grown oranges and vegetables. We will go this morning to see the oranges and lemons growing on the tree. We have seen plenty of ripe strawberries. As soon as the sun shines out we will go and cut some bee trees and then the honey eating will take place. We are so carried away with our trip of sight seeing that we have forgotten our real age, the writer does not feel himself to be a boy of more than 20 past. We will let you hear from us again before we start so you can meet us at the depot and help us with the bear and deer skins and the feather beds that we are to bring back with us.

With best wishes, a merry Christmas and a happy new year to the Editor and his many readers, I remain as ever Your friend,

E. H Lowe.

Why Refer to Doctors

Because we make medicines for them. We tell them all about Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and they prescribe it for coughs, colds, bronchitis, consumption. They trust it. Then you can afford to trust it. Ask your own doctor.

TRACHER INSTITUTE.

The Chilton County Teacher's Institute held its first regular session at the Verbena Academy, Verbena, Alabama, December 13, 1907 with Prof. J. W. Moore, County Superintendent of Education in the chair. After devotional exercises a roll was made up but owing to inclement weather a large number of the teachers and members of the Institute were absent.

An address of welcome delivered by Mr. F. A. Gulledge was heartily responded to by Prof. R. A. Rasco of Jemison. The first subject on the program was the "Educational progress of Chilton county," and was to be discussed by Prof. G L. Speer, but owing to his absence Supt. Moore was asked to discuss the subject, he being better acquainted with the educational progress in the county than anyone present, this proved to be most interesting as in many ways great strides have been made during the last few years, record shows that teachers are better qualified, are better paid and teach in more comfortable houses than ever before. Supplementary talks were made by Profs. Rasco and McCreeless and Rev. C. E. Johnson.

The afternoon session of the Institute began at two o'clock and all the subjects allotted were discussed and substitutes having been secured for absentees. "The bible in our public schools," was discussed by F. B. Williams and Rev. C. E. Johnson, all favoring this of course.

At Saturday's session more teachers were present, "The repuisites of a good teacher" was discussed by Rev. C. E. Johnson instead of Prof. Rasco, he having left. Papers were read on various subjects by W. Z Hodges, O. T. Headley and B. I Sessions Saturday afternoon session was equally harmonious, Prof. S. B. Groves of the Thorsby Institute spoke on "How to increase the usefulness of institution." Valuable suggestions were made which were appreciated. The last question being asked, where shall the next Institute be held? The committee on Resolutions made their report, Bethel church and schoolhouse was the place selected.

Copy of Resolutions:

Resolved; that it is the sense of your committee that the present Institute in point of attendance, interest and ability as shown by the quality of the papers and addresses presented is equal or superior to any ever held in Chilton county, and we feel like congratulating the teachers of the county on the evident progress made, and urge that the standard set by the work of the past two days be maintained. That as teachers we appreciate the presence and helpful service rendered by the Rev. C. E. Johnson, pastor of the M. E. Church South, and thank him for his address. That the name of Prof. W. A. McCreeless deserves mention for the evident thought and pains which he has given to the work of preparing for the Institute and making it a success. That we desire to express our warmest thanks for the open hearts, hands and homes with which we have been welcomed and entertained by the good people of Verbena, they too have set a standard of hospitality that will long remain a challange to other communities that may entertain the Institute. That in view of the incressing importance of our work and to hold up the standard of official organization, we recommend that the minutes of the Institute be put in permanent form and preserve for future reference, and to this end we recommend that the Institute procure a suitable book of record and instruct its secretary to transcribe the minutes and preserve them and that this be made a permanent rule for the guidance of future institutes. That a copy of these resolutions be offered to the county papers for publication,

Respectfully submitted,
Miss Ada Rasco,
Prof. T. B. Williams } Com.
Rev. S. B Groves
J. W. Moore, County Supt.
O. T. Headley, Secretary.

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

An Expert on Banking.

Congressman Charles N. Fowler, chairman of the house committee on banking and currency, advocates a credit currency system as a remedy for financial ills. In the course of a recent speech he said:

"The right should be given to national banks to issue an amount of credit currency equal at least to their capital.

"I now declare that if this government continues its present policy of injecting into the arteries of trade and commerce fiat, bond secured currency, by swapping securities, by bond speculations, by treasury manipulations and by executive manipulations, we shall continue to move only with an accelerated speed and with the directness of a musket groove and the absolute certainty of passing time toward a commercial breakdown.

"When we were in the throes of commercial distress, national law pointed the way. It was through the use of current credit, related to and based upon the commercial commodities of the country—the things we eat, wear and use.

"What was it? It was the clearing house certificates and cashiers' checks, a pure credit currency."

Congressman Fowler represents the Fifth New Jersey district and is serving his seventh term in the national house of representatives. He is a native of Illinois, a lawyer by profession and is fifty-five years old.

The Main Question.

Representative John Sharp Williams is retailing an anecdote to the groups that now frequent the capitol which he pronounces the best bit of wit he has heard in a long time. It was during the recent Mississippi gubernatorial campaign, when the Hon. Jeff Truly was one of the unsuccessful aspirants for the majority suffrage of his fellow citizens.

Prohibition doctrines figured in the struggle, as in many latter day political struggles of the south, and seemed very important to a Methodist minister whose name Mr. Williams omitted to mention.

"Brother Truly," said the minister, "I want to ask you a question. Do you ever take a drink of whisky?"

"Before I answer that," responded the wary Brother Truly, "I want to know whether it is an inquiry or an invitation."

Almond Meal.

Almond meal can be used when the complexion will not accept soap. Formula—eight ounces of sweet almonds blanched and powdered, eight ounces of wheat flour, two ounces of powdered orris root, two drams of oil of lemon and eight drops of oil of bitter almonds.

Lotion For Burns and Scalds.

Have this lotion made up to be used in emergencies for burns and scalds: Two drams of boric acid, two ounces of glycerin and two ounces of olive oil. Apply constantly to the surface with absorbent cotton or bits of old soft linen.

Iodine Stains.

To take out iodine stains dip the article in milk and rub the spots with starch as you would with soap. Rinse in clear soft water.

Eternity

The boys and girls we cannot neglect at any time. The great men and women of the future are the boys and girls of today and they deserve to be properly shod in good shoes.

If you buy ill-fitting and uncomfortable shoes for your children, you may ruin their feet and make trouble for them the rest of their lives. If you get shoes for them that are not well made, that allow their feet to get cold and wet, you may be doing something to make them sick, possibly unable for the rest of their lives. You would not maliciously ruin their feet or make them sick, of course.

"STAR BRAND SHOES ARE BETTER"

Why then, do you not buy "Eternity" school shoes for them? The shoes that fit and feel good from the minute they first put them on, wear well and please, and cost no more than the other kind.

"Eternity" school shoes have two full soles from heel to toe that are put on with screw fasteners. That's why they keep feet always warm and dry and the soles can't rip and pull apart.

As they have a neat, dressy appearance, these shoes can be used for both service and dress.

Remember—"Nothing Lasts Like Eternity."

Tanning Recipe.

Process for Calf, Kip and harness in from six to thirty days—For a twelve pound calf skin take terra-japonica, 3 lbs; common salt, 2 lbs; alum, 1 lbs; put these in a copper kettle with sufficient water to dissolve the whole by boiling. The skin or skins will first be hined, haired and treated in every way as for the old process, then it will be put into a vessel with sufficient water to cover it, at which time you will put in one pint of the composition, stirring it well adding the same amount each night, when you will add the whole, handling two or three times daily all the time tanning. Kip skins will require about 20 days; light horse hides for harness, 30 days to make good leather, while calf skins will only require from 6 to 10 days at most. Dogberry's Poetry.

Giving evidence at Marylebone a young constable said he found a dagger on a man he had arrested. "A what?" Mr. Plowden asked as the constable held the weapon up to view. "Why call it a dagger? It has not the slightest resemblance to one." "Well," faltered the constable, "a sheath knife." Mr. Plowden returned: "Yes. Now, try in future to be less picturesque in your descriptions. You cannot be too matter of fact in the witness box. I dare say you have leanings toward poetry in your nature, but you must stifle them in the witness box."—London Standard.

Corrigan Has Strong Stable.

One of the best stables in training at New Orleans is that of Edward Corrigan, the former master of Hawthorne. For several years Corrigan has been racing many horses in the south, but this year he has a stable which he thinks will be able to win a good share of purses. He has thirty-nine horses now quartered at the City Park track, of which he is a stockholder, and he intends to race most of his horses at that course.

There are twelve in the stable that are four-year-olds and upward, seven two-year-olds and the youngsters. Names for many of the two-year-olds and yearlings have not yet been announced.

To the groans that followed nought could be heard but the low sobbing of the girl.

He waved red, "French Percy" found them all. Then, with a bitter sneer, he threw down his weapon.

"Now, take me to your hangman."

CHAPTER XI.

FOR three hours Wellington's spy and his assistant had remained shut up in a room of the White Falcon inn. Jacques Fourney still paced angrily across from wall to wall, while Jean, the wanker of the two, utterly dejected, had thrown himself down on the floor in one corner. From there he now cursed bitterly at the crop eared foot of an innkeeper and then bemoaned his own fate.

Fourney stopped in his hurried walk to berate his cursing comrade.

"For the love of heaven, Jean, be quiet, and let us make some plan for getting out."

"Get out?" ejaculated Jean. "How in God's world can we get out of this hole he's tricked us into? If you had just left your pass in that coat the Frenchman's foot wore off, we had not been stopped."

"We brought the signet ring, clear proof of 'French Percy's' position. A good exchange, I think it," protested Fourney.

"But 'French Percy' will have found that pass, taken the alarm and gone flying, we are waiting for the idiot governors to send for soldiers to take us," Jean argued.

"The more reason we must work our way out by cunning. I'll fix it." And Fourney began again to walk.

The White Falcon inn was but a scant five miles from the castle. When they slipped from Duberre's room that night, the spies had made straight for the inn. It was after 10 o'clock when they got there and doors were closed tight. With difficulty they aroused the place, and the sleepy landlord stood aghast at two strange wayfarers who wanted horses at that time of night. They were dirty and torn and scratched from walking through the muddy fields. Ill looking customers any one would have called them. Then mine host caught sight of pistols ill concealed, and that decided him.

"Highwaymen who have lost their quarry," he thought. No, they could not have dared. He kept both for five days, he said. Fourney begged, pleaded, insisted, all in vain. It was the king's business they were on, he urged. The loyal innkeeper pursed up his lips and asked for proofs. Fourney could show nothing. His only credentials were in the coat left at the castle.

Mine host became in turn obstinate, sulky, suspicious. At last, angry, the chief spy drew a pistol, promising great rewards, but threatening dire vengeance if the horses were not forthcoming. Then mine host seemed to yield and straightway invited them into the house to drink a bottle of wine, while the grumbling hostler stumbled sleepily out to prepare horses for the "noble gentlemen." Mine host loyal the unsuspecting travelers into an upstairs room while he went for the wine. He was gone so long that Fourney started after him, only to find the oak door barred on the outside. Then were the spies trapped. In the morning mine host, as he informed them through the door, would send for the soldiers "to seize and hang the highwaymen."

The soldiers were fifteen miles away. They would not reach the inn perhaps for thirty hours. By that time "French Percy" might have escaped. It behooved the blood suckers to hurry. Fourney stopped suddenly in his hurried walk about the room.

"Jean, I have it!" he exclaimed and darted to the fireplace.

The prison evidently had been once a chamber for important guests. Though now dismantled of fine furniture, its size and the big open fireplace showed the quality.

"Can you make it?" asked Jean.

Fourney, the small one, shook his head. "I'll try." And without more ado he thrust his head up into the black hole.

Ten minutes after a slight, scot be-clothed figure crept cautiously along the slate pole of the White Falcon. The roof sloped down to a low kitchen.

Quickly Fourney slipped over the roof down that way. His stockinged feet made no noise on the old shingles. Soon he had reached the lowest spot. Then a short eight foot drop to the soft grass below. The kitchen window stood invitingly open. Through it the spy crawled quickly. Then, with all the daring and skill of his calling, he stepped through the inn toward the upstairs room where his assistant was still confined.

Secure in his belief that the highwaymen could not break through barred windows, and safe doors, mine host had gone to sleep. The country lout he left to watch the prisoners' door caused loud enough to drown the slight noise made by Fourney taking the bar from place. Now the comrades were reunited. They lifted the stable key from the sleeping hostler and started downstairs. Then some grim humor made Fourney pause.

"Stable," he whispered. Reflecting, the spies picked up the sleeping man carefully and bore him within the room. He only moaned a bit in his slumber. When the door was safely barred again they crept down through the house and out of the kitchen window. Not a soul had been disturbed. A number of horses stood within the stable. They picked the two best and led them out just as the moon was setting.

"We'll reach the garrison about daybreak," said Fourney as they started.

On through the black night the pair rode, hard as horses could drive, for this was the king's business. Five, seven, ten, twelve miles of country quad were passed over. The horses had begun to flag now, but under the goad of the whip trees and fields went by almost as fast as at first. Then the brown road unwound before them for a straight last dash. Madly they urged on the race. The day was almost breaking.

In that gray, dead hour of the early morn a jeering century jibbed his greatest and wondered "where was that relief." Then horses' hoofs in wild race pounded along the country road. Alert, the century sprang to the charge.

"Halt!" The sudden challenge rang out clear.

"'French Percy's' ears!" spoke Fourney to Jean.

"Halt, there!" sounded the second fierce command.

"All right. We surrender!" answered Fourney.

As he rode forward his tired horse stumbled and the pistol in his holster went off accidentally.

CHAPTER XII.

"ENTER!" cried Duberre, as there came a knock at his prison door.

There was the sound without-out of a heavy bar being raised, the big doors swung open, and Sir Henry Percy stalked in. The Vicomte de St. Croix arose and bowed deeply. "Ah, my cousin!"

The prison was the old waiting chamber at the castle. They called it the waiting chamber because of an ancient story that in the Roundhead days the Percy then at the head of the family retired to this room, swearing never to smile again or to move forth until the king over the water should come to his own. And that old Percy held to his oath and lived in that room, keeping always a weather eye open for the Roundhead invasion. And there one morning they found him dead. And so they called it the waiting chamber. At any rate, the room, with its barred, single stained glass window, its dark furnishing and somber hangings, well fitted the legend. It was in this waiting chamber that a later generation of Percys had confined this second conqueror, who had come to his own from "over the water."

Sir Henry Percy stood in the middle of the floor, embarrassed. "I've come to see you," he said at last.

His cousin smiled. "To lead me forth to the hangman? Truly, I'm honored." More embarrassed than ever, the blunt old squire held out his hand.

"No, to thank you for your noble, though misguided, defense of my daughter Mag. They've told me of it."

It was the Frenchman's turn to be surprised.

"Misguided!" he cried, seizing his cousin's hand. "Why, sir, he put a breath of insult upon an angel."

"Tut, tut, my boy!" answered Sir Henry hastily. "'Twas but a lovers' quarrel, and since no great harm came of it I can the more rejoice, for it showed you can't hurt the old stock. You can't ruin a Percy, even if you make him a Frenchman. That's why I am glad." And he slapped the dancing master on the shoulder right heartily.

St. Croix was not so enthusiastic. "Harm enough for me," he said. "Sir Ralph only laughed derisively.

"Ha, ha!" he cried. "Your sword pricked through the fleshy part of his arm. The hilt struck him in the face and knocked him senseless. Zounds, man, you did thrust hard! But now John is not exactly the worse end side to be about with his neck bound up and a splitting head. And as for me"—he paused to point Duberre to the rifle style—"I've come to get you out of this."

To hold a chance for life before a man condemned to certain death is dangerous. Even the hardened "French Percy" gave a great gasp of joy.

"Me, free! Ah, monsieur—cousin—I do not understand!" he cried.

Sir Henry was himself affected. "It means," he blurted huskily, "I could not let so plucky a Percy hang. Even if he is part Frenchman by birth, he must be a Percy true to run such risks to see his family home. And Captain Thorncliffe set the other story straight."

Then the old squire went on to tell how Captain Thorncliffe had explained that May's woman wit saw through the disguise of her cousin; that she came to warn him and was near to being caught, and only to save him had hidden in the clock.

"It must have been spurt for you," roared Sir Henry, finishing.

"It was," answered his French relative dryly. Then he came back to the main subject. "But, Cousin Henry, how am I to get away?"

"Trust me, my boy," laughed the squire. "We are guarding the door by turns—Thorncliffe, John and I. I am on from 9 to 10 o'clock tonight. The soldiers who have been sent for cannot reach here before midnight. On my watch I will leave the bar up. About half past the hour you will hear me sing. Then slip out. Strike me, but not too hard, and I'll fall senseless and so remain for half an hour."

The eyes of the Vicomte de St. Croix sparkled. At the chance for life he was again "French Percy," daring and reckless.

"Can I procure a horse?" he asked eagerly.

Sir Henry nodded. "My own pet hunter will be waiting near the lodge gate, a long cloak on the saddle, pistols and a dagger in the holsters. There"—he held out his hand—"run, my boy, God bless you!" The squire's voice was suspiciously husky, and he blew his nose hard. He turned and had almost reached the door when the jeering bobbesman called him.

"But, cousin, what of mademoiselle—my cousin May?"

Sir Henry stretched his head in perplexity, then his face brightened.

"Why, if you have an address, she shall write you an invitation to the wedding."

"But could I not see her, thank her, say farewell?" begged St. Croix, his soul in his words.

The other shook his head. "Not easily, but I can take a message of farewell."

"Not farewell, but an revoir," answered the French cousin, smiling. Mistress Percy's father was more puzzled than ever.

"What?" he asked.

The prisoner drew himself up and spoke very slowly.

"A St. Croix would remain the Percys, cousin." And his meaning was very clear.

For a full minute Sir Henry looked only blank. Then gradually the astounding proposition sifted through into his consciousness. An offer of marriage from a Frenchman! His honest English heart blazed fierce anger at the insult.

Furiously he strode up to St. Croix and shook his fist in the face of that effeminate young man. "You insolent puppy! You scoundrel! Love, my daughter—my May! What do you mean?"

"And she loves me, I'll swear it!" was the quick retort, for this bit of knowledge was the one thing in French St. seemed fit to fear the hottest blast of British rage.

"Too low breed!" roared Sir Henry.

The other corrected him very quietly. "You forget, cousin, I'm a Percy too. My blood's as proud as yours. My mother was one of the older branch. There's no taint in the St. Croix line."

Sir Henry tried vainly to emulate his calmness.

"By the eternal! I'm glad you told me," he blurted. Then, rage swept, he continued furiously: "Do you think I'd let her marry you, a traitor outcast, an enemy of the king—you, who have King Rob blood on your hands—you, a spy, a thief, who stole over here from France, plotting to rob me of my dearest treasure? But you'll never get her, for you'll be dead before she's married."

"Aye, that I will before she marries Wilmerding," interrupted St. Croix sharply.

Sir Henry had at last secured reasonable calmness.

"Right you are," he sneered. "I'll have my friend the bishop over from Sir Harvey Johnston's tomorrow. Hanged you'll be, and we'll marry her to her true lover the day after."

And with that parting shot the angry squire pounded on the door to be let out.

Utterly dejected, St. Croix threw himself in the only chair the waiting chamber afforded. Without he could hear the sound of the heavy bar falling into place and the loud voice of Sir Henry admonishing Captain Thorncliffe to "watch that cutthroat Frenchman close."

To whom it may concern: I am [illegible] years' experience in hospitals and private cases, and for the benefit of the people of Clanton I wish you would publish my experience with the cod liver preparation, Vinol.

"I was completely prostrated from overwork. I had no appetite, could not sleep, my kidneys, liver and bowels became inactive, and as I grew weaker I could not retain other medicine or food on my stomach and raised blood. The doctors said my condition was critical and I would probably die.

"As I had seen Vinol prescribed for my patients with such remarkable results, I decided to try it. After the first bottle I began to improve. I continued its use and soon began to sleep and eat well; every organ in my body was strengthened and became normal, until it seemed good to be alive and I was restored to perfect health and strength.

"I advise all my patients who need strength, rich, red blood, and flesh tissue to take Vinol, as it is so far superior to old-fashioned cod liver oil emulsions, or other tonics." Elizabeth M. Cremond, Trained Nurse, Boston, Mass.

Good Cough Medicine for Children.

The season for coughs and colds is now at hand and too much care cannot be used to protect the children. A child is much more likely to contract diphtheria or scarlet fever when he has a cold. The quickest cure via cold the less the risk. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a favorite reliance of many mothers, a few of those who have tried it willing to use any other. Mrs. F. Matcher of Ripley, W. Va., says: "I have never used anything better than Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for my children and it has always given good satisfaction. This remedy contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given as confidently to a child as to an adult." For sale by Upchurch Drug Co., Clanton; A. Horn, Thorsby.

Talked Too Much.

In a certain village of New Hampshire there is a quaint old character known as Boss Mellin keenly alive to the truth of the old saying, "Silence is golden." Mellin's gift in this respect approaches genius, though he was fully aware of what he deemed his shortcomings therein.

Mellin used to make mattresses for a living. One day a lawyer of the place entered his shop and asked, "Boss, what's the best kind of a mattress?"

"Husks," was the laconic response of Boss.

Twenty years later, so runs the tradition, the same man again entered the shop and again asked what, in the opinion of Mellin, was the best kind of a mattress.

"Straw," said Boss.

"Straw? You told me husks was the best!"

Boss Mellin emitted a sigh. "I've always ruined myself by talkin'," said he.

His Ambition.

"To think," said the visitor, "that you will have to go through life an ex-convict!"

"Well, miss," replied Crowbar Claude, "to tell you the truth, just at present there ain't nothing I'd like more to be."—Exchange.

POTATO SHRINKAGE.

About Ten Per Cent to Second. Proper- ly Stored Tubers.

Every one knows how potatoes shrink and change their flavor as the winter grows late. The water tends to evaporate, and this is accompanied by certain chemical changes within the tuber. The temperature of the storage room affects especially the activity of the protoplasm and the production of water and carbonic acid from the sugar, and thus it is that potatoes stored in a warm place are more likely to shrink than those in a cool place.

When They Are Frozen.

These facts also suggest why frozen potatoes have such a sweet taste. The change of starch into sugar by the enzymes goes on regardless of the cold, but the activity of the cell protoplasm is checked by the cold, and instead of being broken down the sugar accumulates. The sweet taste is more noticeable in tubers which have been slowly frozen than in those subjected to a sudden cold, because the sugar has had a longer opportunity to form. If frozen potatoes are left for a few days in a moderate temperature, part of the sugar will revert to starch and the sweet taste in a measure disappear, but such potatoes never wholly regain their original flavor.

Favorable Temperature.

Of course the amount of material which is broken down during storage will vary with the conditions, but sound potatoes properly stored should not shrink more than 10 or 12 per cent.

The most favorable temperature for keeping potatoes is from 32 to 50 degrees F., and if the storeroom is dry, well aired and partly lighted they are less likely to be attacked by disease or harmful bacteria.—C. F. Langworthy.

In this neighborhood (Union county, Pa.) for ten or more years ice has been preserved in almost convenient and inexpensive manner. The contrivances do not deserve the name of houses, though I believe they are called "ice houses."

On a convenient site telegraph, telephone or other round poles are planted so as to make a square or oblong pen of the desired size. Rough boards are nailed on the inside of the posts so as to form the walls, leaving a place for doors, as is usual in ice houses. A floor is made of coal ashes one foot or less thick, so as to afford complete drainage. No roof whatever is provided. Indeed, most of those who keep ice in this manner say that roofs are entirely unnecessary and that the ice keeps even better without a roof over it than with one.

The ice is cut and packed in the usual manner and then is covered with sawdust one foot deep. I do not know of any one covering it with straw, but should think if that were used it should be cut first. Our dealers here pack the ice with a space of six inches left next the walls and afterward filled with sawdust, and this space is kept filled as the ice melts. The floor is made of anthracite coal six inches to one foot deep. The posts forming the house are tied with telegraph wire or with braces placed on the outside. All other plans of keeping ice are here abandoned.

Farm Brevities.

The early lambs command the top notch in the market.

As winter comes on look after the comforts of your milk cows. The best time is a little ahead of time.

Let the sunshine into the stables. It is a great deodorizer and purifier and the deadly foe of tuberculosis.

It doesn't pay to compel stock to stand in drafts. Lumber is high, but not so expensive as ailing horses and cows.

The dairyman who carries a herd of dry cows or strippers through the winter is not likely to find his occupation remunerative.

If there are any low places about the barn and yards where puddles collect and freeze, fill them up at once and thereby possibly avoid a broken leg and the loss of a favorite animal.

If your hogs have not done so well as you expected, find out the cause. It may have been in the breeding, but more likely it was because of early mistakes in feeding. A judiciously selected pig given the proper treatment seldom disappoints his owner.—Farm Journal.

Care of Berry Bushes.

The pruning of raspberry, blackberry and dewberry canes should have attention. Cut out the old raspberry canes and thin the new canes and stake and tie up. Shorten back the long, trailing blackberry and dewberry canes and cut out all old dead wood.—Southern Planter.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson XIII.—Fourth Quarter, For Dec. 29, 1907.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Comprehensive Quarterly Review—Golden Text, Ps. lxv, 11—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

(Copyright, 1907, by American Press Association.)

Lesson I.—Joshua, Israel's new leader (Josh. i, 1-11). Golden Text, Josh. i, 5, "I will not fail thee nor forsake thee." We should not fail at the beginning of this review to note the fourfold "Be strong and of good courage" (verses 6, 7, 9, 18) because of the presence of the Lord. Nothing can compare with this and His blessing.

Lesson II.—Israel enters the land of promise (Josh. iii, 5-17). Golden Text, Ps. cvii, 7, "And He led them forth by the right way, that they might go to a city of habitation." By the dividing of the Red Sea they got clean away from Egypt, and by the dividing of Jordan they really entered the land. One great truth typified at Jordan was the dying and rising again of Christ and every member of His body, and thus believers enter their land of promise.

Lesson III.—The capture of Jericho (Josh. vi, 8-20). Golden Text, Heb. xi, 30, "By faith the walls of Jericho fell down after they were compassed about seven days." If you have a Jericho of any kind, God can overthrow it, and will if you will implicitly obey Him, but there must be the renunciation of self and trust in the blood alone as set forth in the circumcision and passover of chapter v.

Lesson IV.—Caleb's faithfulness rewarded (Josh. xiv, 6-15). Golden Text, Matt. xxv, 23, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things." For forty-five years living on a promise of God, with discouragement on every side, but kept by the power of God in health and perpetual youth, as strong at eighty-five as at forty—what an illustration of Isa. xl, 28-31!

Lesson V.—The cities of refuge (Josh. xx, 1-9). Golden Text, Ps. lxii, 7, "My refuge is in God." These cities and even their names were wondrously typical of Christ, as seen in our lesson upon them. They were six out of the forty-eight which were given to the Levites, who had no possessions like the other tribes, for the Lord was their inheritance (Josh. xiii, 14, 33; Num. xxxv, 6, 7). The contrast is striking that these cities were only for the "not guilty," whereas the Lord Jesus is a refuge for sinners.

Lesson VI.—Joshua renewing the covenant with Israel (Josh. xxiv, 14-28). Golden Text, Josh. xxiv, 15, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve." The great things which God has done for us in Christ Jesus should certainly lead us to serve Him in sincerity and in truth and put away from us all idols. If we cannot persuade others to do this, we can at least say, with Joshua, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord (verse 15).

Lesson VII.—Gideon and his three hundred (Judg. vii, 9-23). Golden Text, Deut. iii, 22, "Ye shall not fear them, for the Lord your God He shall fight for you." When the Lord finds emptiness and weakness and nothingness yielded to Him He will in His own way and by His power glorify His name. The might and wisdom of man are only a hindrance to Him.

Lesson VIII.—World's temperance Sunday (Rom. xiv, 12-23). Golden Text, verse 13, "Judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way." I would urge that in reviewing this lesson very much be made of the first verse, "Every one of us shall give account of himself to God," the redeemed at the judgment seat of Christ and all who die in their sins at the great white throne. All the unsaved shall be at the latter, and religious churchgoers may be there beside drunkards.

Lesson IX.—The death of Samson (Judg. xvi, 21-31). Golden Text, Eph. vi, 10, "Be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might." A Nazarite defiled, power gone, himself humiliated and God dishonored—what a sad picture! Yet see the marvelous grace of God in using such a one and in placing him among the men of faith of Heb. xi. The possibility of time wasted and lost, of works burned up, of our being ashamed, should make us desire earnestly to glorify God in all things and at all times.

Lesson X.—Ruth's wise choice (Ruth i, 14-22). Golden Text, Ruth i, 16, "Thy people shall be my people and thy God my God." Compare the devotion of Ittai to David and of Elisha to Elijah and remember what it means to be a disciple (Matt. x, 37; Luke xiv, 26, 27, 33). Not many Christians are willing to be disciples; they find it too costly.

Lesson XI.—The boy Samuel (I Sam. iii, 1-21). Golden Text, I Sam. iii, 9, "Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth." A child who was an answer to prayer and whose whole life was an illustration of answered prayer, an obedient boy to whom God could tell His thoughts and purposes, whose ear He could get when He could not get the ear of His aged servant Eli—even a child may minister to the Lord acceptably. Any one who is willing may.

Lesson XII.—Christmas lessons and Samuel the upright judge (Matt. ii, 1-12; I Sam. vii, 1-13). Golden Text, Luke ii, 11, "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord;" I Sam. vii, 3, "Prepare your hearts unto the Lord and serve Him only." The devotion of the wise men and the purpose of Israel in Samuel's day were to the same person—the babe of Bethlehem was the Lord God of Israel.

Protection of Crops.

It seems that every farmer is coming to trying to compel the farmer to practice a rotation of crops. If corn is grown for several years on the same plot, the land will be infested with all manner of insects, from the root worm and louse to the insect that eats the tassel. The former who grows wheat year after year on the same plot of ground has the Hessian fly and the chinch bug to contend with; cotton planter and tobacco planter have each insects to fight and fungous diseases to overcome because one crop has been grown continuously for a number of years on the same plot. If rotation is practiced these insects and diseases may be held in check. If rotation is not followed no remedy will destroy or overcome them.—Southern Cultivator.

Stage Caricatures.

The comedians supposed to be broadly humorous in our travesties are either made up as Irishmen with green whiskers or Germans verging on imbecility. In France the stage butt is a caricature of the English globe trotter; in Germany, a freak imitation of our depictions of Uncle Sam.—Travel Magazine.

Makes the Liver Lively

Foley's Orino Laxative gives permanent relief in cases of habitual constipation as it stimulates the liver and restores the natural action of the bowels without irritating these organs like pills or ordinary cathartics. Does not nauseate or gripe and is mild and pleasant to take. Remember the name Foley's Orino Laxative and refuse substitutes. Upchurch Drug Co.

Gravitation.

The law of gravitation is thus given in Newton's words: "Every particle of matter in the universe attracts every other particle with a force whose direction is that of the straight line joining the two and whose magnitude is proportional directly as the product of their masses and inversely as the square of their mutual distance."

Early to Bed

and early to rise makes one healthy happy and wise—especially if you take Herbine before retiring. A positive cure for Constipation, Dyspepsia and all liver complaints. Mrs. [illegible] Columbia, Tenn., writes: "I always keep a supply of your Herbine on hand. ALL CHILDREN of birth inherit a predisposition to healthy life and activity—more or less pronounced.

The stomach and bowels are the most sensitive organs of the body.

They are the battlefields of disease, and because less attention is given them, more evil can be traced directly to them than to any other organs of the body.

Where there is the least indication of trouble or you are feeling out of sorts,

Dr. Caldwell's (Laxative) Syrup Pepsin

should be taken at once.

It is the best preparation for the stomach and bowels.

If they are all out of order, it will eradicate the trouble, tone up the parts and restore them to their natural condition. DR. CALDWELL'S SYRUP PEPSIN communicates itself to the whole system and its beneficial and curative effects are permanent and instantly experienced.

It will keep you in good health.

DR. CALDWELL'S SYRUP PEPSIN can be obtained in both dollar and half-dollar sizes from all druggists.

Your money will be refunded if it does not benefit you.

Your postal card request will bring by return mail our new booklet, "DR. CALDWELL'S BOOK OF WONDERS" and free sample to those who have never used this wonderful remedy. Write for it to-day.

The Castle Comedy

By Thompson Buchanan

"But I don't intend to marry."

This is a rattling good love story of merry old England at the close of the Napoleonic wars.

In the scene pictured here the wilful young lady is telling her father she doesn't intend to marry. She means she does not intend to marry the nobleman her father has selected.

The reason, as the reader soon discovers, is that she has fallen in love with a French dancing master. Out of this complication grows the story.

Even if Thompson Buchanan were not a Louisville boy and had not written inimitable stories for the Herald we would not hesitate in surrendering to his Castle Comedy the palm for absolute fascination.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Cooking a la Francaise.

Clean a small head of cold boiled white cabbage and let it drain perfectly dry. Stir in very thoroughly a mustard spoon, a small teaspoonful of salt, quarter of a teaspoonful of pepper and four tablespoonfuls of milk or cream. Heat through, then add two well beaten eggs. Turn the mixture into a buttered frying pan, stirring until hot and a delicate brown on the under side. Place a hot dish over the pan in order to reverse the cabbage when turned out to serve.

Plan For Company Entertainment.

A few days before company is expected take pencil and paper and write out the bill of fare for each meal of each day the company is going to stay. If any alterations are desired when the time arrives, write it down. Also make a memorandum of the extra household work, if any has to be done, while guests are present. Place these lists with a pencil in a convenient place where you can easily refer to them and check the items off as they are no longer needed.

Remedy For Dandruff.

An excellent dandruff remedy is made by combining sixty grains of resorcin, one dram of ether, one dram of olive oil and six ounces of alcohol. Rub into the scalp every night and shampoo the hair with melted soap or eggs every week.

A certain amount of dandruff shows a perfectly healthy condition, but too much will interfere with the growth and health of the hair.

Scrubbing Machine.

A real novelty in the invention line is the scrubbing machine herewith shown. Because of its extremely simple construction the method of operation is obvious. The machine is composed of a water tank mounted upon a suitable wheeled frame. Leading from the water tank is a feed pipe, which carries the water to a pair of circular scrubbing brushes placed in advance of the frame. A valve in the feed pipe regulates the flow of water.

MACHINE IN OPERATION.

Journaled in the frame is a shaft having a gear meshing with the gear on the rod supporting the brushes. Motion is imparted to the brushes by means of a crank handle. The different parts of the machine are connected so that the turning of the handle operates the brushes and also turns the wheels on the frame, causing the machine to move gradually over the floor. Where this scrubbing machine is employed the operator is saved from unnecessary bending of the back incident to the ordinary method of scrubbing floors.

Removal of Warts.

A lunar caustic pencil, to be had at any drug store, will soon remove a wart. Moisten the point and apply to the wart not long enough to make a deep burn. It will turn black and in a few days scale off. If not entirely removed by the first application, use the caustic again when the burn is well. In time the wart will all be burned off.

About the House.

A clothespin is excellent to use to screw a small hook into hard wood.

A little vinegar in polish will obviate the dead, oily look so often noticed after cleaning furniture.

When mixing flour for thickening add a pinch of salt to the flour before mixing with water, and it mixes much more smoothly without lumps.

Prepared Tea For Black Lace.

Take one level tablespoonful of dry tea, one teaspoonful of gum arabic and one pint of boiling water. Put into a saucepan and simmer very slowly over the fire until the gum arabic is dissolved and the tea a good black color. Stir occasionally to prevent the gum sticking to the pan and strain through muslin.

Easily Rid

Abraham Brown, of Winterton, N. Y., had a very remarkable experience; he says: "Doctors have got badly mixed up over me; one said heart disease; two called it kidney trouble; the fourth blood poison; and the fifth stomach and liver trouble; but none of them helped me; so my wife advised trying Electric Bitters, which are restoring me to perfect health. One bottle did more good than the five doctors prescribed." Guaranteed for blood poison, weakness and all stomach, liver and kidney complaints, by Upchurch Drug Co. 50c.

Game of Critical Review.

Each player is provided with a pencil and a long piece of paper. He must be cautioned to use his paper carefully, as much space is often required if the players are bright and original. At the head of the paper the players write the title of a book. It must be original and as funny as possible. It may also have a subtitle, as "The Merry Maids of Athens; or, A Tragedy of Ye Olden Times." This is then turned down and passed on. The next is written a quotation, supposed to fit in with the title, though, of course, it never does. Then this is turned and passed on. Next is the author of the book, generally the name of one of the players; then a dedication. It should be dedicated to one of the players or to a well known person. Last is a half serious, half comic criticism of the book. As each player has had a chance at each paper, the disconnected items are very funny when read aloud after the criticism is finished.—Washington Star.

An Intelligent Dog.

A Connecticut lady lost her pocketbook, containing a considerable sum of money, and was naturally anxious to recover it. She had been shopping and visiting during the day and had also been working about the garden. A diligent inquiry and search failed to find the missing article, and finally she gave up in despair and said to a neighbor, "I think I'll send Fido to hunt my pocketbook." Fido, a Scotch terrier, was standing by and, after a quick glance at his mistress, ran out of the house. He was noticed soon afterward hunting and smelling around the garden. A half hour passed, and then Fido scratched at the door, and when it was opened he walked in, bearing the pocketbook in his mouth. He had undoubtedly understood what his mistress said.

A Diamond in the Dark.

It is said that some diamonds will shine by their own light when placed in a dark room. Boys and girls who are fortunate enough to own one might make the experiment by exposing it to the sunlight for a minute or two and then taking it into the dark. Professor Crookes of London says that when diamonds are placed in a vacuum and exposed to a current of electricity they shine with different colored lights. He has seen them emit bright blue, pale blue, apricot, red, yellowish green, pale green and orange rays. One beautiful green diamond in his possession when phosphorescing in a good vacuum gave almost as much light as a candle. The light was pale green.—Chicago News.

Can You Do This?

It is a little harder than it sounds, but if you are determined to succeed and don't mind butting the carpet a few times it can be done. The trick is to take a certain position and pick up a pencil from the floor with one's teeth. Kneel and, placing the right elbow against the right knee, measure out to the extended finger tips and there place a pencil on the floor; then, clasping the hands behind the back and still kneeling, bend carefully forward and take up the pencil with the mouth.

WILD OUTBURST OF JOY.

Shrieking Night When London Flung Aside All Dignity.

"Shrieking night" gave a smile to the English language. "The night," she said to a gleeful woman in a wild outburst of joy. Certainly we did turn somersaulting upside down that night—Friday, May 18, 1888—in London, and we had to say and to appear to justify us. It was not merely that Habsburg was relieved—the news in which Baden-Powell and his men, edging close to starvation, had sat tight on kopje and on pluckily; it was the far greater relief that came to all England at the end of that dark winter through which all England, silently, doggedly, had taken its nasty punishment, with the winning at last of a substantial victory. The tense strain was relaxed suddenly, and London, with good cause for it, sniffed extravagantly through all that glad night long.

Tiddlers are peacock tail feathers. Tibbling is tickling other people's noses with them. With my own happy eyes last night I saw two Whitechapel girls, with proper Whitechapel curls twirled on their temples, tibble the nose of a Pall Mall policeman! And that policeman—imagine, if you please, all possible impossibilities fused into one single ultra violet ray of incredibility—fairly thrust forward his law embodying nose to be tibbled by those worse than regicides—he was a Pall Mall policeman, remember—and benignly rewarded them with the essence of their desire!

On the same lines I may cite another scene from that same evening. I was on Piccadilly an intensely respectable looking Englishman—middle aged, stout, gray whiskered, dressed in seemly black and wearing a seemly top hat—who most obviously was a member of the conservative middle class, a well to do city man, I should say, with a tidy villa at Shepherd's Bush or Hackney, who on Sundays very likely handed the plate. And this by rights typically phlegmatic Britton was seated, with his clubby legs very wide outspread before him, on the roof of a four wheeler, and he had the union jack in one hand and the standard in the other, and he was cooning along the middle of one of the great streets of London in the thick of the roaring crowd filling it waving those national banners with an incomparable fervor and barracking just as loud as he possibly could barrack!

But I saw no mate in the eye of my phlegmatic English brother—we were about of an age—flag waving and barracking up there on the roof of his growler, possibly because at the moment I had something of a beam in my own. Strictly speaking, the relief of Mafeking was not my affair at all. But, God bless me, there I was, too, with my standard and my union jack (they cost me sixpence apiece, mounted on little bamboo poles, and so long as I live I shall cherish them), and I went about London that night waving those flags just as crazily as anybody and roared away with the national anthem and "Soldiers of the Queen" and the "Absentminded Beggar" just as loudly as anybody. — Thomas A. Janvier in Harper's.

A Chummy, Fearless Bird.

So unafraid are humming birds of man that they will readily enter open windows of houses if they see flowers within. I have even read of their visiting the artificial flowers on a lady's hat when she was walking out, and other writers speak of their taking sugar from between a person's lips. In a room they become confused and, being so frail, are apt to injure themselves by striking against objects. More than once I or members of my family have caught the frightened little waifs for their good and released them in the open air. It is of no use to try to keep them in captivity unless possibly it were in a greenhouse where there were plenty of flowers, for no artificial food has ever been found which will nourish them. Yet even there they would probably kill themselves by flying against the glass.—H. K. Job in Outing Magazine.

Molasses a Good Feed.

The Maryland experiment station made some exhaustive experiments in feeding molasses last year, the results of which are published in bulletin 117, from which the facts here stated are quoted. These results show that the addition of molasses to a ration has a tendency to increase the digestibility of both hay and grain feeds. This, coupled with the generally observed fact that molasses contributes toward making feeds more palatable and also acts as an appetizer, gives to molasses a relatively high place as a stock food and makes it more valuable than its analysis alone would indicate.

Advising a Statesman.

"If you must monkey with restrictive legislation, Abner, why not go in for something popular?"

"Can such legislation be popular?"

"It can. Make it a penal offense for a man to ask for a hair cut on Saturday afternoon."—Washington Herald.

CHILDREN'S favorite tonic is White's Cream Vermifuge, the cure for worms and all children's diseases. It not only kills the worms, but removes the mucus and slime in which they build their nests. Its action on the child is mild and leaves him in a healthy condition. Joe Daniel, Syracuse, Tenn., says that he gave one of his children White's Cream Vermifuge when the doctor thought it had colic, and from the first dose the child passed 70 worms. "Enter it," he went on, "and [illegible] Captain Marston," addressing the [illegible] and officer, "be witness."

Then, quite overcome, his [illegible] dropped again, and he lay [illegible] Major Windsor, the one with [illegible] the bet was made, at once had [illegible] and conveyed to the hospital. It [illegible] found to be a very grave case, and [illegible] or the patient had been [illegible] consciousness by means of [illegible] tives the doctor told him there was [illegible] ball in his back which could [illegible] extracted by a very severe [illegible]

"But I must warn you," added [illegible] surgeon, "that you will very [illegible] die under it."

"If anybody will bet me £50 [illegible] event, I'll consent," said the [illegible] "Send for Windsor, and I'll [illegible] to persuade him to make it [illegible] quits."

The major was sent for and [illegible] to the terms.

"Now saw away with you," cried [illegible] colonel. "I won't die."

The operation was at once [illegible] menced, and the gallant gunner [illegible] ed triumphantly through the [illegible] while the major, who was a [illegible] fellow, paid the bet with the [illegible] satisfaction.

"I tell you," Colonel Hay used to [illegible] when relating the story, "not for [illegible] bet I should be a dead man now, [illegible] was only my determination to win [illegible] kept me alive."—Pearson's Weekly.

GETTING BREAKFAST.

Experience That Taught a Man to Upset Woman's Ability.

"Ever try to get your own breakfasts?" asked the man whose wife was away. "No? Well, it's a most valuable education in the art of living in more than one thing in the mind at a time. I can understand after a while of it how women get to be experts in matters of detail.

"We men go through life blundering along first at one thing and then at the other, with the idea that what we are doing at the moment should be finished before anything else is taken up. You can't get breakfast on that principle. Women instinctively know how to run half a dozen things at once. When they have the coffee on the stove and the toast is browning and the eggs cooking they can put the finishing touches on the setting of the table with a light and cheerful air. At the psychological moment the coffee will be whisked off, the toast protected and the eggs removed to a place where further application of heat is impossible. It's a wonder to me how they do it.

"A man if he essays to make coffee must devote his whole attention to the operation; likewise with everything else. If he doesn't there'll be trouble. He isn't a success in a double event and when the question is one of a triple or a quadruple act he simply will throw up his hands. At last," he concluded, with a shade of pride in his tone, "till he's got the hang of it.

"So you consider yourself quite an expert now, do you?" his friend inquired with mock seriousness.

"If a succession of spoiled meals qualifies me," the first speaker replied. "I'm it."—New York Press.
